

QAnon: Freedom Movement or Political Hoax?

Overnight it seems “Q” and “QAnon” and “WW1WGA” (“Where we go one we go all,” the pledge of the QAnon movement) and other such terms have become a worldwide phenomenon—or conspiracy theory, according to which view you choose.

Simply put, QAnon is a movement that began with an October 2017 post on the anonymous imageboard by “Q,” who said he was a government insider who had information about the “deep state.” He later moved his posts to another imageboard, .

According to Travis View, who has studied QAnon and written about it extensively for The Washington Post, the essence of the QAnon conspiracy theory is that there is a worldwide cabal of Satan-worshipping pedophiles who essentially rule the world and thus control everything. They control politicians, the media and Hollywood, and they cover up their existence. The theory says this group would have continued ruling the world were it not for the election of President Donald Trump, who knows all about this evil cabal’s wrongdoing. And one of the reasons Donald Trump was elected was to put an end to it.

We would be ignorant of this behind-the-scenes battle between Trump and the evil cabal were it not for “Q.” Through the imageboard posts, “Q” reveals details about this hidden battle as well as secrets about what the cabal is doing. “Q” regularly sends out messages describing the progress of the “great awakening” (regular people standing up to defend freedom) and its goal to defeat the deep state.

“You shall know the truth, and the truth shall set you free” (John 8:32).

Bestselling author of God, Trump and COVID-19 Stephen Strang had political insider Doug Wead as a guest on his Strang

Report podcast after the Left's 2019 attempt to remove Trump from office. Strang explains that Wead appeared on Lou Dobbs Tonight and "claimed that the deep state, which has successfully overthrown governments of foreign countries, was going to try to actively seek a coup d'état of the duly elected president of the United States. He also said that if there were ever a time in history to be concerned about the rise in communism, now is the time. Wead added that the "deep state is determined to overthrow Donald Trump."

And Strang said, "Even though Donald Trump has survived this attack [impeachment], I believe the deep state will continue to try to remove him from office."

WWGIWGA (Where We Go One We Go All) is a collaborative book written by 12 author/contributors and citizen journalists who have YouTube channels, blogs, Twitter followings or sub-Reddits that feature Q decodes, news and commentary. Author bios and contact information are available in the book, which provides a good guide to QAnon.

It is as yet unclear whether QAnon is a hoax or a real movement. But what is abundantly clear is that there has been a sudden backlash and push to discredit it by the deep state and its various outlets. If nothing else, QAnon and related theories should move all believers to study, prayerfully discern and above all else, urge others to pray and mobilize the 37 million believers who did not vote in 2016. We have just 55 days to keep the movement for religious freedom—and so much more—alive. {eoa}

How 'Jesus Juice' Can Lead You Down the Road to Destruction

Some call wine "Jesus juice" because of the following Scripture passage:

On the third day there was a wedding in Cana of Galilee. The mother of Jesus was there. Both Jesus and His disciples were invited to the wedding. When the wine ran out, the mother of Jesus said to Him, "They have no wine."

Jesus said to her, "Woman, what does this have to do with Me? My hour has not yet come."

His mother said to the servants, "Whatever He says to you, do it."

Six water pots made of stone were sitting there, used for ceremonial cleansing by the Jews, containing 20 to 30 gallons each.

Jesus said to them, "Fill the water pots with water." And they filled them up to the brim.

Then He said to them, "Now draw some out, and take it to the master of the feast."

And they took it. When the master of the feast tasted the water that had been turned into wine, and did not know where it came from (though the servants who drew the water knew), the master of the feast called the bridegroom, and he said to him, "Every man serves the good wine first, and after men have drunk freely, then the poor wine is served. But you have kept the good wine until now."

This, the first of His signs, Jesus did in Cana of Galilee, and He revealed His glory, and His disciples believed in Him.

There are also those who say it's OK to drink as long as you don't get drunk, citing this verse: "Do not be drunk with wine, for that is reckless living. But be filled with the Spirit" (Eph. 5:18).

Yet I have seen and experienced both in thought and action.

When I first surrendered to the call into full-time ministry serving God, I had been delivered from drugs, alcohol and sexual perversion more than 18 years earlier.

When I say "delivered," I mean delivered. There was no desire or taste for any of it for years later. The only thing I had a taste for was Jesus.

Then one disappointment after another set in. One rejection after another came through. Feelings of loneliness made a home with me, and I allowed them to do so. During the first few years of ministry, I was on fire. I was ordained, had my first and only child and started a small ministry. With all of this going on, I was under attack with my marriage. My then-husband and I were already having trouble, but I believed God for our marriage to heal. I prayed, fasted and believed God for three years and no change; things got worse. After Holy Spirit led me to catch my husband cheating, I heard the Lord say, "End it now."

I was devastated. I didn't want this. I didn't want to be a single mother running a church. This was not my dream or my plan.

But I obeyed God. My life went from being married and covered to not married and covered anymore. Suddenly, I was single and overseeing a church. This is when it all began. The devil wanted to have his way with me. I had not yet been healed from mother issues, and now, I was divorced. I still had my son and the responsibilities of the church. I wanted to talk to the leaders from my church to tell them how I was hurting, but they depended on me to lead them to Jesus.

I plowed through. I kept preaching. I kept praising, I kept praying, seeking and knocking for healing. I kept praising Him. I knew Father would heal me and deliver me again someday. I never gave up no matter how my heart was broken, no matter how much my soul was in pain and no matter how alone I felt. I kept pressing.

This would go on for years. Two churches. Two books. A growing internet radio show and podcast until I finally got my deliverance. Hallelujah! But what a road from the beginning to now. I had given up when I took that first drink of wine. I got tired and didn't know it. Too many disappointments. Too much discouragement and too much hurt. I really didn't realize how much it weighed on me because I had become immune to it all. So when I took my first glass of wine on a New Year's Eve some years back, I used the Scriptures I mentioned to justify my choice.

I started having a glass of wine once a week at a restaurant. Social drinking wine. That's OK, right? I'm not drunk. One glass of this "Jesus juice" isn't going to hurt, right? Then it became OK to drink with other Christians and so on and so on. I have been drunk, and so were my Christian friends. We drank together. Leaders, laymen, whatever and whomever, serving the Lord.

Some would say they don't have a problem with alcohol. But I would say if anything holds you back from the fullness of God, it's a problem. It became a problem for me. I would fast from wine and declare, "It will have no control over me." Then I started liking tequila, not just liking tequila but loving tequila. The drinks were just tasting so good. The pressures of life were starting to kick in even more and before you knew it, I thought about a glass of wine or a margarita before turning to God up to four or five days a week.

The morning after, I would pray an extremely self-condemning prayer to our Father, who knows all and loves us all so much. The devil was sinking his hooks even further into my soul. After fasting often and trying to show some sort of discipline didn't work, I totally surrendered to God. I chose to sacrifice my drinking.

That's when Holy Ghost came in, and Jesus delivered me again. People don't realize how much drinking is really going on in the church. With depression attacking God's people, it is really hard to say who can handle drinking and who can't.

It reminds me of when I first tried crack in the world. The woman who introduced it to me looked and acted fine. She didn't look like an addict because she wasn't. When she introduced me to it, she had no idea how this piece of rock would become the escape for someone like me, not yet healed from my mother, rejection and abandonment issues.

It's the same with leaders and church folks drinking wine and offering it to people who may be coming out of some sort of addiction or emotional hurt and pain. God will look at this as being on our hands: "But whoever misleads one of these little ones who believe in Me, it would be better for him to have a millstone hung about his neck and to be drowned in the depth of the sea" (Matt. 18:6).

No one introduced me to wine on that New Year's Eve, but I have drunk wine and tequila with other Christians, old and new. The thought of how this can hinder the growth of a fired-up-for-Jesus Christian hurts my heart and soul so much. I am delighted God forgave and has set me free from the cause and the effect. I wanted to escape. I wanted to celebrate and pretend nothing was wrong. But no drink was strong enough. God stopped the enemy, and He gave me strength and power to war against him. Now the devil is defeated in that area of my life. I have been reinstated, and I am ready.

I can identify with Peter because I denied Jesus' power. I denied the fact that I was on a winning team. I wanted my countenance back. I wanted the light of Jesus shining through me again.

I was better off in the state I was in than where I ended up. The enemy wants to kill us. When we are weary, that's when He comes in.

"Ahithophel also said to Absalom, 'Let me choose twelve thousand men so that I may arise and pursue David tonight. I will overtake him while he is weary and weak and strike him with terror; all of the people who are with him will flee. Then I will strike only the king'" (2 Sam. 17:1-2).

"The thief does not come, except to steal and kill and destroy. I came that they may have life, and that they may have it more abundantly" (John 10:10).

We must hold on to the fact that Jesus came so we might have life. He didn't die on that cross for nothing. He wasn't raised from the dead for nothing. We have been redeemed and resurrected because of His love for us.

I know some of you are tired. Some of you have turned to food, sex, alcohol and even anorexia. Please hear me: God can fix it! He knows all. Let Him pick you up, son. Let Him clean you off, daughter. You have work to do. You win!

Use the experiences of your past to set the captives free. You are not alone. Don't be ashamed of the gospel. This is gospel: Moses, Elijah, David, Jacob, Peter, Paul, just to name a few. God forgave, healed and delivered them all.

Get back up, and let's do this! You got this! Because the King of kings has you! You have seen God move for you many times. Don't give up! You have seen Him provide for you. Don't give in! You have seen Him do miracles. Don't stop now. Don't stop believing. Don't stop seeking. Don't stop praying.

If I had stopped, I probably would have been back on crack. If I had stopped, I would probably be dead right now. God is faithful. Don't allow the cause to give power to the action that destroys your destiny. This is your opportunity right now. Take it. Give it back to our Father!

We all fall short of His glory. He is waiting right now for you to trust Him. Trust Him with everything. Run to Him! He is still in control.

America: Hell Is Real, and Real People Go There

Surveys reveal that people believe in hell, but most don't believe they themselves will go there.

The reality is that no one ends up eternally separated from God and suffering unfathomable punishment for drinking booze, casual sex or not being good enough. People go to hell for failing to repent and rejecting Jesus as risen Lord and what He accomplished by His finished work on the cross.

Our eternal fate rests totally upon our individual choice. As God reveals our sin and His solution through the death, burial and Resurrection of His Son, we condemn ourselves if we refuse His merciful provision.

Obama, Trump, Putin, Hillary, Lady Gaga, Brad Pitt, Beyoncé, Taylor Swift, LeBron James, Queen Elizabeth and on and on, every single person who ever lived, including you and me, will all individually stand before the judgment seat of Christ (2 Cor. 5:10) to discover our eternal destiny.

Watch this brief video presentation to motivate you in your evangelism to follow the biblical model encompassing both the mercy and holiness of God. You'll no longer wonder whatever happened to hell. {eoa}

How Churches Must Deal With Unwelcome Government Intervention

At the beginning of 2020, none of us expected the COVID-19 pandemic. And few expected that battling the outbreak would create governmental powers in which America would begin to look like a police state.

As new restrictions on gatherings were lowered to fifty and then again to fewer than 10 people, it quickly became apparent that this pandemic would be a game changer. Going to sporting events, movies, theatrical events, concerts and church meetings was suddenly forbidden.

New York Mayor Bill de Blasio threatened to close churches and synagogues “permanently” if they refused to shut down during the pandemic. And Virginia Governor Ralph Northam declared that church gatherings of 10 or more could result in a $2,500 fine and up to a year in jail.

Yet in the face of such restrictions, a number of businesses in various states, including liquor stores, were deemed “essential” and allowed to remain open. Why were churches so quickly deemed “nonessential?” And why was the public so quick to accept this?

Pastor Rodney Howard-Browne, a longtime friend of mine, was arrested and booked into a local jail on Monday, March 30, after holding Sunday worship services at The River at Tampa Bay, the church he leads. Howard-Browne was charged with unlawful assembly and violating the county’s stay-at-home order. He was later released on bail.

Originally coming to the United States as a missionary from South Africa, Pastor Rodney has been holding services where God's presence has been moving in power for many years. His intention was to allow the Holy Spirit to move and heal the sick as they would come for prayer. After all, that is what the Bible says for us as believers to do.

The media loved this story: "crazy Pentecostal pastor endangers the health of his church members by recklessly disregarding governmental edicts for no 'nonessential' gatherings over ten people." But the case brought up some interesting legal issues.

Whether churches are "essential" in the midst of this coronavirus crisis is a critical question that must take into consideration many factors. The related question, whether churches should open or close, must be considered in the context of each church and community.

Mat Staver, founder of Liberty Counsel, came to Howard Browne's defense, and the results were amazing. The county dropped the case because Staver sued for violation of the church's constitutional rights to freedom of religion and freedom of assembly.

Thankfully Christian law firms are defending freedom against these anti-God trends in the culture that manifested themselves during this time of crisis. The double standard has been obvious.

As the country went into lockdown mode, America's pro-life leaders voiced alarm that churches were being forced to close down, while in most states abortion clinics were allowed to stay open.

"How dare they jail pastors and close the doors of the church while the abortion industry remains open to spread the virus and put our lives at risk?" said Janet Porter, president and founder of Faith2Action and the author of the original pro-life Heartbeat Bill.

“While free speech and freedom of religion are being banned, Planned Parenthood continues to get away with murder,” said Mark Harrington, president of Created Equal, a pro-life group. “The cure is now worse than the disease.”

“In a pandemic, a double standard is deadly,” Porter said. “Either there is a threat or there isn’t. We must either close the doors of the abortion business or open the doors of the church.”

“By definition, the surgeries abortion centers perform are elective—that’s why they call it ‘choice,’” said Harrington.

To classify abortion as “essential medical care” during the novel coronavirus crisis is “preposterous,” said Mark Crutcher, founder and president of Life Dynamics, a Texas-based pro-life organization. “Abortion providers don’t care that there’s a pandemic. All they care about is killing babies. There can be no sacred cows in a pandemic. It is indefensible.”

Though the governors of several states committed to halting nonessential and elective surgical abortions, judges blocked most of their orders from being enforced.

“The abortion industry continues to defy state orders and national health directives, putting us all at risk of the deadly COVID-19 virus,” Porter said in March. “Until the abortion centers are closed, none of us are safe.” {eoa}

UK Police Try to Silence Pastor After LGBT Community's Threats

A Christian pastor in the United Kingdom was told by the local police that if he offends the LGBT community with a social media comment, he could be breaking the law, even though a pro-LGBT mob threatened to burn down his church.

Christian Concern, a U.K. persecution watchdog, reports Pastor Josh Williamson of Newquay Baptist Church was warned by police to keep his views in a "safe environment" after being targeted by a wave of anti-Christian abuse, including threats of violence and calls for his church to be burned down.

Last month, Williamson, 34, replied to a post on a local news outlet's Facebook page that reported this year's Cornwall pride event would be canceled. Williamson simply wrote, "Wonderful news!" under the post.

When he was questioned about his comment by another user, he replied, "because I don't think sin should be celebrated."

Answering more questions from other users, Williamson quoted what the New Testament says regarding homosexuality from the books of John, James and 1 Corinthians 6:9-11.

Then on his personal Facebook page, he shared the news article and wrote, "Hallelujah!! We prayed at our prayer meeting on Tuesday night that this event would be canceled. We also prayed that the Lord would save the organizers. One prayer answered, now we wait for the second prayer to be answered."

Cornwall Pride organizers saw Williamson's personal page, took a screenshot of the post, and then tagged Newquay Baptist Church and posted it along with negative comments made by other users about gay pride. They then blocked out the names on each comment, making it appear that all of the comments were posted by the pastor.

The pastor's wife also received online threats, and Williamson's head was superimposed onto an image of homosexual pornography, which was then shared online.

The LGBT group then called on its supporters to report the pastor to the police for a hate speech/crime. Activists also made several threats, including protesting at the Newquay church's Sunday services, having the church's charity status revoked by the government and threatening to have Williamson deported to his native Australia.

Realizing This Will Launch You Into Your Kingdom Destiny

I believe there's been some confusion within the body of Christ as to what our responsibilities are as individuals in the kingdom of God. Many, well-intentioned kingdom brothers and sisters have decided that they are going to change the world. They are going to do everything in their power to transform hearts and minds and cultures. Whether at their workplace or their schools or through their daily outings, they have decided they are going to impact their culture by their words and their actions. While I believe God desires for us to be influential, I don't believe He expects it to happen through our own doing.

Something powerful takes place when we make Jesus King of our lives. His reign doesn't just empower us to do more, create more and speak better. His influence in our lives encourages us to actually become who He says we are. When we take on His yoke, our positions as sons and daughters are no longer something we strive to attain or prove. That sonship or daughtership is something we become. It is something we walk in.

We gradually become what and who Jesus is. We trade in our efforts, our dreams and our desires, and we begin to realize the excellence that is formed in our being. In a recent episode of the Next Level Podcast With Michael McIntyre, I had a discussion with actor and producer Fab Altamura of Bethel Church. He explained that recognizing your God-given gifts, talents and desires is an important first step in becoming the influencer you were created to be.

"Be excellent at what you do ... people notice that over what you say," he said. "If you're good at what you do, if you're fun to work with and if you're humble, that's going to speak more than anyone going and saying 'I want to be a star. I'm going to go and convert Hollywood.'

"That's not the way to convert Hollywood," Altamura said. "Our mandate shouldn't even be to convert Hollywood. Our mandate should be to go and do what you love doing and be fruitful in what you love doing. Because that is going to be an expression of who God created you to be. When you are like that, you become infectious."

That's it. That's what it's all about. It's about allowing the character of Jesus to infect you. To transform you. It's not about perfectionism (which is something we can strive for); it's about excellence (which is what Christ working through us looks like). If we can learn to become who we were created to be, we will then learn to do what we were created to do.

I'm not against effort. I'm actually someone who practices and preaches effort: not holding back and giving your best. But I am against the mindset that tells us we have to do to become. I believe we should become so that we can do. It's the position of sonship or daughtership that I want to launch my efforts from. And if I know who I am as a son in the kingdom of God, then I can expect His excellence to flow through me in every area of my life.

Now that's being influential.

Prayer Event Becomes 'Worship Protest' After Seattle Barricades Christians Out

The Christian community refused to let city officials in Seattle, Washington, shut down a Labor Day worship event organized by "Hold the Line" founder Sean Feucht.

In a video posted on Twitter, Feucht said, "The city decided to barricade the entire park for our peaceful worship and prayer gathering."

We're calling tonight a "Worship Protest" for legal reasons.

See ya in the streets next to GasWorks Park!

Live on Facebook at 6pm!

Already so many people here next to this bulldozer. Tonight could get a little wild #LetUsWorship

– Sean Feucht (@seanfeucht) September 7, 2020

So the event became a “worship protest” and was moved into the street near Gas Works Park.

Seattle Parks and Recreation closed the area on Sept. 4, citing that the decision was “due to anticipated crowding that could impact the public health of residents.”

Feucht told CBN News that the worship protest was still powerful and “the Spirit of God moved.”

“The Lord called me to declare that this is a new Jesus People movement,” he added, saying that the restrictions imposed by politicians “are only making the church stronger.”
