

Prophecy Unfolding? Jonathan Cahn Warns of Pagan Avatars Rising Again

In a recent interview with Joni Lamb and Paula White-Cain, Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu opened up about the role of faith in his leadership and the enduring strength of the Israeli people. The Israeli prime minister described how his upbringing, family traditions and relationship with Donald Trump have shaped both his personal life and his approach to governing Israel during some of the most challenging times in the region's history.

"I was raised on the Bible," Netanyahu explained. "We studied the Bible from second grade on. I married Sarah, who is the daughter of a great Bible scholar. Our a national Bible champion of Israel at the age of 15."

For Netanyahu, the Bible is more than a book; it is a living presence that informs every decision and action. "When I, as a soldier, marched in the hills and valleys and plains of Israel, I thought of Joshua and of David, the prophets of Israel, the kings, and the judges," he said. "The Bible is the stone on which we stand. It only gets stronger with the challenges we face."

Turning to international relations, Netanyahu addressed his close partnership with U.S. President Donald Trump, highlighting both personal and national bonds rooted in shared values.

"We have more than a friendship; we have a bond of faith and national interest. It's a bond of destiny," he said. Netanyahu cited several pivotal actions during Trump's administration, including the recognition of Jerusalem as Israel's capital, the relocation of the American embassy, acknowledgment of Israeli sovereignty over the Golan Heights, withdrawal from the Iran nuclear deal and the establishment of the Abraham Accords that brought peace with four Arab nations.

"It's a bond of living in times that can forge the future that can safeguard our common free civilization," Netanyahu says. "And I think President Trump has done wondrous things for us."

As Trump has tried to bring peace to nations all around the world, his relationship with Netanyahu appears to be the pinnacle of these relationships, to stand with Israel, the Lord's chosen people.

On August 16, Westman left his job with a marijuana dispensary which is known as RISE. A former coworker from the business told the Minnesota Star Tribune that Westman had been “disciplined for lateness and skipping work,” which they believe led to decision to leave the organization. The coworker also noted that Westman was working as a “personal care specialist” engaging with those part of Minnesota’s medicinal cannabis program. The unnamed coworker further said that Westman mentioned “recent events have been the catalyst for this thing he has been planning for a long time,” but did not say exactly what this event was.

One day before Westman committed the heinous act, police were reportedly in touch with his mother, Mary Grace Westman. Fox stated that authorities were responding to a wellness check on a child and mother that previously lived with her. This was not in connection to the shooting.

During this time, continue to lift up in prayer the families who were affected by this tragedy.

Jonathan Cahn: Will the Rapture Happen on Rosh Hashanah 2025?

A message has been spreading rapidly across social media, claiming that the rapture will occur this September 2025 during Rosh Hashanah, the Feast of Trumpets. New York Times best-selling author Jonathan Cahn addressed the viral prediction, offering both biblical insight and a clear warning against setting dates for Christ's return.

Cahn explained that the biblical calendar provides a prophetic roadmap for God's redemptive plan. The first coming of Jesus fulfilled the spring feasts of Israel in remarkable detail. "The salvation of Messiah, the death of Messiah, the Lamb of God on the day of the Passover lamb—He died. Then the day of the resurrection on the day of the first fruits... and then 50 days later, Pentecost on a Hebrew holy day," Cahn said. Because these major events corresponded precisely with the Hebrew festivals, many believe the fall feasts may align with the Messiah's return.

The autumn festivals begin with the Feast of Trumpets, followed by the Day of Atonement and the Feast of Tabernacles. Each one carries prophetic themes connected to the second coming of Christ. The Day of Atonement speaks of standing before God in judgment, while Tabernacles represents celebration, the kingdom and ultimately the hope of heaven. At the center of it all is the Feast of Trumpets, a day marked by the sounding of the shofar.

Finally, Cahn juxtaposes Harris's birth symbolism with Trump's. He says Trump was born on a Friday, ushering in the Sabbath, when Jewish congregations worldwide read a fixed passage of Scripture. "What was the scripture?" he asks. "The scripture was God calling forth a vessel into the world—calling forth a trumpet to make the trumpet, bring the trumpet forth into the world." Cahn explains that Trump functions as a literal and prophetic "trumpet" that when the trumpet sounds, the gods retreat.

Leaders, as Cahn shares he argues, are never merely leaders on the surface—they are avatars channeling rival kingdoms. America's political crossroads is at a spiritual collision: if we become empty from God, we will fill ourselves with something dark and dangerous.

As the Daily Mail noted, this find is known as the Petralona skull because it was found in Petralona Cave located in Greece and is dated to be younger than 300,000 years old. It has been decided among experts that the skull was not that of a Homo sapien or that of a Neanderthal. According to the research team, "This fossil has a key position in European human evolution."

There is one spiritual point that we must look back to concerning this skull: It is possible that this could be a real-life reminder of the existence of the Nephilim. The conclusive message that this skull is not of human origin naturally evokes images of the Nephilim, the giants mentioned in Genesis 6:4, described as mighty beings born from the union of the "sons of God" and the "daughters of men." Perhaps this really is a remnant of that mysterious race.

Whether or not this skull can be definitively linked to the Nephilim, its existence is a reminder that the world may hold secrets far older and stranger than we ever imagined—secrets which validate the biblical account of extraordinary beings walking the earth long before our modern civilization.

Blood Moon, Fall Equinox and

Rosh Hashanah 2025: Are the Heavens Pointing to Change?

Netflix's latest animated phenomenon, "KPop Demon Hunters," is being hailed as one of the platform's most successful films. However, Pastor Vlad Savchuk is warning that beneath the glitter, there are dangerous spiritual messages hidden in plain sight. "Parents need to be alert," he says. "This is not just entertainment. It's an entrance into your soul."

1. Normalizing the supernatural through shamanism.

The film portrays demonic battles as something overcome through magic songs and mystical barriers. Savchuk warns that this approach reflects elements of Asian shamanism and New Age spirituality rather than Scripture. "Instead of teaching kids to look to Jesus Christ as the deliverer, the movie presents this mythical barrier and magic songs as the way to fight demons," he explains. This risks desensitizing children to the reality of spiritual warfare and the authority of Christ.

2. Blurring the line between good and evil.

By making one of the main characters both a "half-demon" and the savior figure of the film, it presents a worldview where darkness can coexist with and even contribute to good. "The Bible clearly states that light and darkness should not mix," Savchuk says, pointing to verses like 2 Corinthians 6:14. Rather than depicting deliverance from demonic roots, the film glorifies embracing them.

3. Music as a weapon apart from God.

Throughout Scripture, music is powerful when tied to God's Spirit—David's harp soothed Saul's torment, and worship brings God's presence. But in "KPop Demon Hunters," music itself becomes a mystical force of self-expression with power apart from God. Savchuk cautions that such portrayals may lead children to believe that all spiritual music is harmless, when in reality, music can open doors to bondage if divorced from God's presence.

4. The gospel of self-acceptance instead of repentance.

The heroine's big turning point is self-embrace: accepting herself as part demon. Savchuk notes how this parallels cultural messages of self-discovery and empowerment but directly contradicts the gospel. "Biblically, shame can serve a holy purpose," he says. Shame alerts us to sin and drives us to the cross, where Jesus removes both guilt and shame. Instead of embracing sin as identity, Christians are called to crucify the flesh and walk as new creations in Christ (2 Cor. 5:17).

5. Glamorizing demons for young audiences.

With its bright colors, catchy K-pop tunes and idol-like characters, the film packages darkness as attractive and fun. By showing one of the characters fall in love with a demon and singing emotional duets with him, the story plants sympathy for demons—desensitizing viewers to their true danger. "What Scripture calls dangerous, this film packages as entertainment," Savchuk warns, citing Ephesians 6:12 and 1 Peter 5:8.

Why This Matters for Families

Pastor Vlad emphasizes that "KPop Demon Hunters" is more than a cartoon. "It's teaching a worldview where sin is identity, shame is good and demons are lovable," he says. In a culture already blurring lines between right and wrong, the film's themes risk planting seeds of confusion in young hearts about good, evil and identity.

Instead, he urges parents to ground their children in the truth of God's Word. "Jesus—not self-discovery or self-expression—has authority over demons," he says. Identity is not found in a balance of light and dark but in being born again through Christ. Shame is not embraced but brought to the cross, where it is lifted and healed.

As the film dominates global charts and captivates the next generation, Savchuk's call is clear: do not let Netflix disciple your children more than Scripture does. "Parents, be alert," he says. "Teach your children that their true identity is found in Christ alone."
