

Epstein Fallout, Weather Manipulation and a Nation on Edge: Joseph Z Warns of a New Prophetic Phase

According to Pastor Mike Signorelli, many aspiring entrepreneurs make the mistake of focusing too much time on branding before actually building their product or audience. In a question-and-answer session, one fitness creator asked Signorelli if it was a good plan for her to spend a year on branding. His answer? Don't spend time branding before starting your business.

"The year that you would spend on branding is the year that you can spend on building. So, brand can come later," Signorelli says.

He also encouraged her to see herself in a different way: the builder of the business is the brand.

"You are the brand. Fonts don't matter. Colors don't matter. All that stuff can come later. I know the science behind it. I get it," Signorelli says. "You are the brand and you are the person in the video..."

Signorelli points out that focusing on functionality before polish is critical: "A mobile app that's like really well branded but not functional is never going to get used.”

When it comes to platform strategy, YouTube stands out to Signorelli. “YouTube is my favorite platform. I would say if you were going to go all in on everything, anything, go all in on YouTube.” But it’s not about chasing viral moments; rather, “YouTube wants you to build a community. They don’t necessarily want you to go viral. They want you to build a community. And the way that you build a community is by consistent consistency.”

Signorelli also discussed the importance of legacy: “You will be remembered for only two things in life. The problems you created or the problems you solved. Every funeral I’ve ever done, that is what you will be remembered for.”

For aspiring Christian entrepreneurs, the message is clear: stop waiting for everything to be perfect before stepping into what God has called you to build. Your impact won’t come from flawless branding, but from faithfully showing up, solving real problems and serving people well. The platform you choose, the tools you use and even the products you offer are secondary to the trust you cultivate and the consistency you maintain.

In the end, it’s not the polish of your brand that will define your legacy, but rather the purpose behind it. Start building now, and let the brand follow.

7 Spiritual Warning Signs You're Living a Lukewarm Christian Life

In a compelling interview with Gabe Poirot, best-selling author and prophetic voice Jonathan Cahn warns that America stands at a critical juncture—mirroring the biblical pattern of ancient Israel before its judgment.

Drawing from his best-selling works, Cahn outlines eerie parallels between the fall of Israel and the current condition of the United States.

“We are in a window of time,” Cahn says, referencing the biblical precedent where nations were given a set period—be it 40 days, 10 years or 40 years—to return to God or face judgment. He believes the events surrounding 9/11 marked the beginning of this window for America. “Instead of coming back to God, we said, ‘We will rebuild stronger’—without Him,” Cahn explains, pointing to Isaiah 9:10, which records Israel’s defiant response to their first warning strike.

Shockingly, that same verse appears in the One-Year Bible on September 11, long before the tragic attacks of 2001.

According to Cahn, the nine harbingers, or prophetic signs that appeared in Israel before its fall, also have manifested on American soil. From symbolic trees and defiant speeches by U.S. leaders, to objects and ceremonies reenacting ancient Israel's warnings, he asserts these signs have appeared exactly as they did in Scripture. "No one could orchestrate this," he says. "Yet it's all happening."

One example he shares is the sycamore tree at Ground Zero, mirroring the biblical tree struck down in Israel's judgment. In its place, a biblical erez tree (related to cedar) was planted during a public ceremony, just as ancient Israel declared. That tree, which was meant to symbolize America's resilience, later withered and died—on Passover.

Cahn also connects America's moral decline with the return of ancient demonic influences. He identifies the spiritual forces once worshiped in Israel—Molech, Baal and Ishtar—now reemerging in modern form. From child sacrifice through abortion, the removal of God from public life, to the rise of gender confusion and drag culture, Cahn argues the same spirits are reclaiming ground in post-Christian America. "When a nation turns away from God, the house does not stay empty," he warns.

Still, Cahn emphasizes that God's heart is not one of destruction but mercy. "This is the time. The only thing that can save America is revival," he declares. "We must not only pray for revival but live in revival." He encourages believers to remove what doesn't belong in their lives and pursue God wholeheartedly.

Cahn concludes with a reminder that America was originally dedicated to God on its very first day as a nation—on the same ground as Ground Zero in New York City. "God is calling us back to where we began," he says. "Not to destroy us, but to save us."

As the window narrows, Cahn pleads with believers: "Choose revival. The hour is late, but it's not over."

America stands at a prophetic crossroads—one that demands urgency, repentance and resolve. The signs have been given, the warnings unmistakable. This is not a time for complacency but for turning back to God with full devotion. The window of mercy remains open, but it will not stay open forever. What happens next will depend on how we respond.

Red Heifers, Prophecy and Israel: LA Marzulli and Mondo Gonzales Give End Times Update

In a thought-provoking conversation, L.A. Marzulli and Mondo Gonzales discussed the spiritual implications of current events surrounding Israel, the rise of antisemitism and the fulfillment of biblical prophecy—including the red heifer and Third Temple movement.

Breaking News. Spirit-Filled Stories. Subscribe to Charisma on YouTube now!

The conversation started with a focus on the Oct. 7, 2023, attacks by Hamas in Israel. Marzulli cited an affidavit from Hamas that named the red heifer ceremony as a reason for the attack on Israel. "It's stated right in there. The red heifers, the ceremony, kill the heifers, get the ashes, sprinkle them on the temple and the rest is history," Marzulli said.

Gonzales noted, "'re masters of propaganda, and sadly the West and the Western media, they eat it right up without any sort of discernment." He added that the document reflected Hamas' concerns about "the progress of Saudi Arabia with the Abrahamic Accords" and Israel's increasingly religious government, which included temple-related developments.

The discussion then shifted to replacement theology, a controversial doctrine that claims the church has replaced Israel in God's redemptive plan. "Replacement 's wrong on so many levels. And yet most of the church believes in a non-millennial approach," Marzulli said.

Gonzales explained the historical roots of this theology: "Going back early—I mean to the second century—Justin very clearly that the church was spiritual Israel." He added, "As you said, that became the belief by mostly to understand some continuity between the Old Testament and the New Testament."

They also addressed the rise in antisemitism following the Oct. 7, 2023, attack. "It was a bloodbath," Marzulli said. "And then, of course, Israel responded. And as of has still not surrendered. Let that sink in.” He lamented, “We see it ’s not going away.”

Gonzales responded, “Whenever you see that sort of irrational behavior, there’s only one answer—and that is either somebody is it’s spiritual. There’s a blindness there.” He warned this spiritual blindness is “creeping into the church as well.”

The pair also explored the theological divide over Christian Zionism. Gonzales said, “Christian Zionism is simply the belief that the promises of God are still attributed to the nation of doesn’t mean they’re saved.” He pointed to the book of Judges as evidence: “Did they lose their chosenness? No. Chosenness is separate. It doesn’t mean saved.”

Looking ahead to prophecy, he reminded listeners of Jeremiah 30:7: “It’s the time of Jacob’s trouble, and he will be saved out of it. And God will remove ungodliness from Jacob.”

Marzulli closed with a sobering observation: “They are the nation of Israel. They are God’s prophetic timepiece. Everything starts right out of the Bible.”

With antisemitism on the rise, spiritual confusion growing and prophetic events accelerating, Marzulli and Gonzales called believers to discernment, biblical clarity and unwavering support for God’s promises to Israel.

Amanda Grace and Troy Brewer: Prophetic Warnings and Prayer Urgency Amid the Kerrville Flood Tragedy

Kerrville, Texas, once a peaceful town, was struck by a devastating flash flood on July 4, 2025. The sudden storm caused the Guadalupe River to surge over 30 feet within an hour, tragically claiming dozens of lives and leaving many missing – including young girls from Camp Mystic, a Christian summer camp caught in the deluge.

In a livestream with Charisma Media, Pastor Troy Brewer, who has deep connections to the area and its ministries, shared insight on the flood's spiritual significance. He explained how Kerrville was marked by two rare eclipses within months, with their shadows crossing precisely over the town.

“July 4th, 2025, if you add that up, you get 911. There has been a pattern of events happening in the nation since January of 2025 where the dates equal 911... We have a pattern here, a prophetic pattern, an alarm being sounded right now to the nation and to the church.”

She urged believers to stand firm and pray.

“When the enemy shall come in like a flood, the spirit of the Lord shall lift up a standard against him. This is a call for the church in the middle of this to raise a standard in this nation. We are the standard,” says Grace.

During this time of search and rescue, Texas Governor Greg Abbott is encouraging people across the nation to pray with him during this devastating time.

On X he wrote, “Prayer works. Thanks to everybody across the country and across the globe who have prayed for the people of Texas during this very challenging time. So many of those prayers have been answered. As the Bible teaches, pray with thanksgiving to God.”

Prayer works.

Thanks to everybody across the country and across the globe who have prayed for the people of Texas during this very challenging time.

So many of those prayers have been answered.

As the Bible teaches, pray with thanksgiving to God.

– Greg Abbott (@GregAbbott_TX) July 6, 2025

As Kerrville mourns and recovers, the message from these leaders is clear: the tragedy is real, but Christ has promised to never leave nor forsake His people.

Was Elon's 'America Party' Prophesied by Kim Clement?

In an intriguing sermon, bestselling author and prophetic voice Jonathan Cahn dives deep into the first chapter of the book of Revelation, uncovering powerful truths often missed by modern readers.

"Who are the kings? It's us," Cahn boldly declares, explaining how Revelation opens by identifying believers as both kings and priests. Drawing from the Greek word for "king," which implies sovereignty, Cahn emphasizes that believers are not meant to live under the weight of the world, but as those who rule over sin, bondage, and fear. "You are to live over everything," he says. "You are royal, sovereign over your situation."

Revelation, Cahn notes, comes from the Greek word apokalypsis, often misunderstood today as doom or disaster. Instead, it means "the unveiling" or "the removal of the veil"—a revelation of the person of Jesus Christ, not merely end-time events.

One surprising insight from Cahn's message is the possibility that the apostle John was himself part of the line of priests. Citing John 18, he points out that only someone known to the high priest would have been allowed into the priestly courtyard during Jesus' trial. He also notes John's hesitation to enter the tomb in John 20—an action consistent with Jewish law for priests who were to avoid contact with death. “It would make perfect sense,” Cahn says, “for the one writing Revelation, filled with priestly imagery, to be a priest himself.”

Cahn further explains that the word martyr in Greek simply means “witness.” Though commonly associated with dying for one's faith, the term originally emphasized bearing witness to the truth of Christ through one's life.

He then highlights Revelation's unique blessing. “This is the only book in the Bible that says you are blessed just for reading it,” Cahn says. “And you're blessed for hearing it.” The word used—makarios—means “happy” or “blessed,” signaling a divine encouragement for those who engage with the prophetic word.

A profound portion of the message centers on the phrase “Alpha and Omega.” Cahn ties the Greek letters to their Hebrew counterparts, showing how Aleph (A) symbolizes strength and leadership, while Tav (T), the last letter, represents the cross. “The cross is the end—the end of sin, the end of the curse,” he explains. “Jesus said, ‘It is finished,’ and it was.”

Cahn also connects Revelation to prophecies in Daniel and Zechariah, particularly the imagery of the Messiah coming “on the clouds” and being seen by “those who pierced Him.” With today's global media reach, he says, the fulfillment of such prophecies is more feasible than ever before.

Finally, Cahn describes John's exile to Patmos—a small, rocky island off the coast of Asia Minor. Church tradition holds that John was sent there during the reign of Emperor Domitian for preaching the gospel. “John wasn't just writing from a distance,” Cahn says. “He was a fellow partaker in persecution, speaking to a church under fire.”

From unveiling hidden priestly insights to connecting ancient prophecy with modern possibility, Cahn's message challenges listeners to not just study Revelation, but to live in the authority, holiness and expectancy it proclaims.

Jim Bakker's Son Recounts Emotional Conversation with Jimmy Swaggart

Jay Bakker, the son of televangelist Jim Bakker, recently recounted an emotional and heartfelt story of when Jimmy Swaggart reached out his hand to his family in a time when no one else in the body of Christ would.

“Wanted to share something with you,” Bakker says in a video posted to social media. “Growing up, my parents had a very complicated relationship with him. [Swaggart] was not a fan of my parents, and they were both part of a very large denomination, the Assemblies of God. When my parents had their falling, he called my dad a 'cancer in the body of Christ,'" Bakker recounts.

However, Bakker notes that as a teenager, things shifted dramatically.

In a historic and emotional service on July 6 at The Potter's House in Dallas, Texas, Bishop T.D. Jakes officially passed the mantle of senior leadership to his daughter and son-in-law, Sarah Jakes Roberts and Touré Roberts. The pastoral succession marks a significant shift in the legacy of one of the nation's most influential churches and serves as a powerful moment of generational transition.

Surrounded by pastors, church elders and thousands of attendees both in person and online, Bishop Jakes offered a deeply personal and prophetic charge to the couple. "This is where it gets real," he said, as the congregation witnessed the sacred moment of anointing. Jakes emphasized that ministry is a call to servanthood, not stardom. "While your office grants you privilege, it is privilege to serve in the name of Christ."

The succession was not rushed, Jakes made clear. "They've been here almost five years. Because I understand that a skin graft takes time," he said. "It took time and we took time with this, and we are trusting you to be as responsible for them as they are for you.”

Symbolic moments marked the ceremony, including the anointing of Touré and Sarah’s hands and with oil—“snake repellent,” as Jakes called it—representing divine protection and empowerment. “This ain’t just oil. This is snake repellent,” he declared. “Wherever you stick your head, the snake may have to recoil because the oil is against you.”

Touré Roberts addressed the congregation with heartfelt humility, recognizing the weight of the mantle being placed upon him, noting that he didn’t come from a line of bishops or pastors, but was lifted by a praying mother and a supportive family. “My purpose, simply put, is to lift you, to sacrifice, to pay the price and to lift you in every way that I can, with every gift that I can.”

Sarah Jakes Roberts also shared a transparent reflection on the cost of leadership, describing her “yes” to the call as one made with eyes wide open. “I saw the bleeding feet and bleeding hearts. I saw the betrayal and the hurt,” she said. “But I asked God to make it clear that this was His plan.” She offered a prophetic vision for the church’s future, declaring, “We came not to be served, but we came to unleash what God’s placed on the inside of you.”

The couple unveiled “Potter’s House 2.0,” a multi-generational vision committed to spiritual depth, emotional resilience and addressing the world’s most pressing issues through Christ’s message of salvation. The service concluded with prayer, worship and an invitation for members to reengage in the work of the ministry. Dr. Cindy Trimm also gave a powerful message, commending Bishop T.D. Jakes’ years of service.

"Bishop T.D. Jakes has yet to climb his final mountain prepared for him. But we recognize all the mountains he has already climbed. He has climbed the mountain of media where he built a global communication platform through The Potter's Touch viewed by millions," Trimm says.
