

This Message About Diddy's Scandal Is Going Viral—and It Could Save Your Soul

The headlines surrounding Sean “Diddy” Combs have become increasingly disturbing as a federal trial unfolds, revealing allegations of abuse, manipulation and deeply troubling behavior. With 16 witnesses testifying over two weeks, the charges against the music mogul paint a dark picture.

Yet amidst the legal drama and celebrity scandal, Joe Kirby is asking a deeper, more eternal question: What about your own guilt before God?

The trial testimony includes accounts of violence and coercion. Cassie Ventura, Diddy's former partner, testified that their decade-long relationship devolved into fear and control.

“When I decided to leave, I grabbed what I could and I got out,” she said. “But Sean followed me into the hallway by the elevators, picked me up, threw me down, kicked me and tried to drag me back.”

Others shared similarly chilling stories. Hotel security guard Israel Flores recalled an incident in 2016 when he responded to a distress call and found Ventura injured in a hallway. He claimed Diddy tried to bribe him into silence. Former assistant David James described Bad Boy Entertainment as “Mr.

Combs' kingdom. We're all here to serve him."

While Diddy maintains his innocence, the allegations have captured the public's attention—and prompted a powerful reflection. Are we innocent before God?

This sobering question shifts the focus from the courtroom to the heart.

"Every single one of us has broken God's law. We've told lies. We've looked at things we shouldn't have. We've thought angry thoughts, wrong thoughts, hateful thoughts. We've all sinned," asserts Kirby.

Scripture affirms this truth: "All have sinned and fall short of the glory of God" (Rom. 3:23). And the consequence? "The wages of sin is death" (Rom. 6:23). But the good news is not found in hiding our guilt—it's in God's mercy. "God in His grace doesn't want us to go to hell. So He sent His Son Jesus Christ to go upon an old Roman cross and die in our place," says Kirby.

Even someone like Diddy, surrounded by allegations and facing possible judgment, is not beyond redemption. "Did you know this? Even Diddy is not too far gone," Kirby says. "If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness" (1 John 1:9).

In a culture quick to judge and cancel, the gospel offers something radically different—grace. Whether a public figure on trial or a hidden sinner in the pew, forgiveness is available through Jesus Christ. The question isn't just about Diddy's guilt. It's about ours—and what we will do with it.

10 Reasons Israel Is Here to Stay: Biblical Proof You Can't Ignore

In a recent video update, bestselling author and prophetic voice Jonathan Cahn shared a double portion of excitement: new compelling evidence pointing to the possible discovery of Noah's Ark, and a forthcoming book he promises will be "explosive."

Examining this incredible archaeological discovery, Cahn addressed a question that has fascinated believers and skeptics alike: Has Noah's Ark actually been found?

"It's a mystery that has spanned the ages," he said. "Some believe it's now on the verge of being solved."

According to the Bible, Noah's ark came to rest on Mount Ararat, in what is now modern-day Turkey. Near this mountain lies a curious formation known as the Durupınar site—a 538-foot-long mound in the shape of a boat.

Even more intriguing, recent geological and radar-based studies have revealed characteristics consistent with an ancient, man-made vessel.

“The most striking thing... is that the samples that were taken outside the mound were different from those taken within the mound,” Cahn explained. “The mound had lower pH levels and higher organic matter as well as more potassium than the soil around it.”

What does that mean? According to Cahn, these signs suggest rotting wood, exactly what one might expect in the remains of an ancient ark. “If it was just a thing of dirt, a natural formation, that wouldn’t have been,” he said.

Even the vegetation is acting strangely. “The grass inside the boat-shaped site turns yellow and fades earlier in the season than the grass of the surrounding area,” he noted, suggesting a man-made structure lies beneath the surface.

Using advanced ground-penetrating radar (GPR), researchers detected rectangular shapes about 22 feet underground—potentially chambers or construction elements consistent with the biblical description of the ark. A full-scale excavation is planned for the coming years.

Yet Cahn reminds viewers that faith doesn’t rest on artifacts. “Our faith rests on the word of God regardless of anything else. But it’s an added blessing to watch as modern archaeology has continually borne witness to the truth of God’s word.”

He reminded viewers that just as the ark served to protect Noah and his family from evil, we now are called to run to the Lord as our place of refuge.

“Evil will be judged. The day of judgment is coming. So get right with God... Messiah Yeshua, Jesus—that’s the ark. Get into the ark.”

Cahn also shared a major teaser with his audience. “I’ve been writing the newest book and I just finished it. It is just now being sent to the printer.”

While he kept the title under wraps, he added, “It’s going to be explosive. I don’t know what’s going to happen when it comes out.” Followers of his ministry won’t have to wait long to hear more. “You will be the first to get it or to be able to get it... It’ll be the announcement that will be coming. So stay tuned to this channel.”

As Cahn prepares to unveil his new book and the world waits to see what the Durupınar site will reveal, his message remains the same: “Stay strong in the Lord and in the power of His might.”

Kathryn Krick: 4 Keys to Destroy Satan’s Grip on Your Life

Author and researcher Gary Wayne is no stranger to the mysteries of Genesis.

In a recent discussion on Taylor Welch's "The Deep End," he unpacked the ancient flood story through a biblical lens, drawing connections between the Genesis account and flood legends found in cultures worldwide.

According to Wayne, these parallels aren't contradictions—they're confirmations.

"We ought not to worry about other accounts of the flood," he said. "We have the biblical account and we can see how they intersect with the Bible... they're talking about the same details..."

Wayne emphasized that even though the Epic of Gilgamesh is often cited as being older than Genesis, that doesn't discredit the Bible's authority. "That perspective is... we have tablets dating to about 2150 BC... but it doesn't make [the Bible] not true," he explained. "Moses is receiving the ancient story from God."

He views the Epic of Gilgamesh as a polytheistic version of the same flood event, noting its protagonist Utnapishtim is described as part god and part human—clearly a reference to Nephilim, or giants.

"The Noah story is humans. These are giants," he emphasizes. "The details become different is a survival from the polytheist lens of the giants."

In Gilgamesh's world, giants are central, a detail Wayne links to Genesis 6:4 and the concept of a second incursion of fallen angels after the flood.

Wayne further notes that the proof of underwater cities today bring up the greater question of how they got there in the first place, potential proof of ancient Nephilim existence.

"If we look around the earth, we have underwater cities... in the Southeast Asia and elsewhere. And how did they get there? So, I think the flood story is something we should have faith in, and it's God's intercession into humanity," he says.

This is an intriguing notion just may further connect to recent evidence regarding tombs related to these Gilgamesh giant have appeared on social media.

"What the Iraq War in 2003 was really about: The Gilgamesh resurrection protocol," read one post.

Ultimately, regardless of how these giants lived, where and its implications for the future, Wayne points out one thing that is certain about the flood: "This is a worldwide catastrophe that is remembered... because it was the reset of the earth."

Wayne's research challenges listeners to reevaluate what they think they know about myth and history. In his view, the flood was not just an ancient disaster—it was a divine intervention with eternal implications.

Jack Hibbs: The Top Reason Christians Miss the Voice of God

Thank you for walking this journey with us. We believe God is at work—and the best is yet to come.

This decision comes just days after Faith Live said that they were canceling the Newsboys tour after the “‘lack of interest’ and mounting questions came as a direct result of Michael Tait’s unexpected departure, which we were not informed of in advance.” They also noted that the “handling of the transition lacked clarity and transparency, leaving both our team and the public in a difficult position.”

On their Facebook page, Sanctus Real made the announcement of their new Canadian tour.

We are honoured (honored) to announce we’ll be visiting our friends in British Columbia, Alberta, Manitoba, Ontario, and New Brunswick!

In a season where we've witnessed God do the unexpected, this is no exception! We're praying God would move during these concerts and people who've never even heard of a band like Sanctus Real would be compelled to come and sing songs with us that are meant to bring the HOPE of JESUS to a world that is in desperate need of it.

If you're feeling weary, hopeless or tempted to give up entirely, you're not alone.

According to evangelist Perry Stone, nine out of 10 believers will wrestle with at least one of three spiritual attacks—fainting, hopelessness or despair—at some point in their walk with God.

"These are the three spirits that I saw in my own spirit by revelation that are attacking people in the body of Christ," Stone explained. While these spirits can affect anyone, the teaching focuses on how they specifically target believers and how to fight back spiritually.

1. The Fainting Spirit

The first spirit identified is what Stone calls a "fainting spirit." It doesn't refer to physically passing out, but to becoming spiritually weary and emotionally exhausted.

"You lose motivation," he says. "You have no motivation to go to church. You have no motivation to pray. You have no motivation to read the Bible."

To overcome this evil spirit, Stone advises believers to, "Feed your spirit. I put gospel music on and sing with it... I listen to that and it builds me up. I can feel the quickening of the Holy Spirit in me." He also encourages rest—both physically and spiritually—and warns against letting negative information “defile your spirit.”

2. The Spirit of Hopelessness

The second spirit is rooted in Proverbs 13:12: “Hope deferred makes the soul sick.” Stone describes this as a prolonged delay that causes people to give up believing for a good outcome.

“Hope means unseen positive expectation about the future... the anticipation for the good outcome.” When hope is delayed or drawn out for too long, it becomes like a hostage situation: “You start saying, this could turn out bad. This is not going to turn out good.”

But hope is powerful: “As long as people have hope... they expect good and they fight in faith.” He shares from personal experience: “There are times in my life when I’ve gone through things... and I knew in my spirit... hang on to your hope. And in every instance... God did something.”

3. The Spirit of Despair and Suicide

The final and most dangerous spirit is one of deep despair, often leading to suicidal thoughts. “When a person feels hopeless that there’s no hope in this situation, you’ll usually see them go on drugs or alcohol or begin to talk about taking their own life,” he warned.

Drawing from biblical examples like King Saul and Judas, Stone shows how despair can become deadly. But there is hope even in the darkest hour. The message? Never give up on God. "God can do something in like 24 hours the next morning and He has reversed a situation," says Stone. "Do not do it. This is about eternity. This is not about the temporary. This is about the forever... Prayer can change the outcome. Hold on to God."

In this critical hour, believers must recognize the unseen battles waging against their hearts and minds.

These spirits are not just emotional struggles, but strategic attacks meant to derail destinies and silence faith. Now more than ever, we must stay spiritually vigilant, intentionally feed our spirit and cling to the hope that anchors the soul.

Victory is not only possible—it's promised to those who refuse to quit.
