

Charlie Shamp's 2018 Vision Comes Alive: What He Saw About the Next Pope Will Shock You

"God needs His army for this revival to expand," Krick declares. "He needs his army to shine brighter and to be stronger and to receive more impartation of anointing."

As doors are opening and influence is increasing, the devil is reacting in fear and fury. "The devil's angry about the doors that God has already opened... The devil is terrified."

Krick compares Pharaoh's reaction to letting the Israelites go with Satan's attempt to reverse the progress of God's people. "This reminds me of the devil. What have we done? What have we done letting this revival expand to new places? Expand to the TV, to new platforms." The devil, like Pharaoh, realizes too late the power of what's been released and begins to pursue with everything he has.

So, what should believers know? That with with every advancement in God's kingdom, the enemy intensifies his attacks.

"That's why you see attacks whenever you advance," she notes.

“You shouldn’t ever be afraid... when you find the heaviest attacks when you’ve advanced more than ever before. But the devil’s a loser if you can just stand strong in faith.”

Yet, the Israelites’ fear when confronted by Pharaoh’s army is a cautionary tale. “They shift really quickly,” says Krick. “They were quick to lose faith... forgetting that God did all those wonders in Egypt for them.” But Moses responded with bold faith: “Don’t be afraid. Just stand still and watch the Lord rescue you today... The Lord himself will fight for you. Just stay calm.”

Encouraging believers not to give in to fear or persecution, Krick urges believers to, “Keep your eyes focused on Jesus. Remember all the miracles He’s done... He will surely come through again.”

As revival spreads across nations, the assurance is firm: “The sea is splitting. The sea is splitting for the revival army.”

Victory is not just coming—it’s already begun.

The Truth About Manifestations in Deliverance—What Really

Happens?

In a passionate and sobering message, Perry Stone urged believers to take to heart the biblical warning: “Beware of the dogs.”

Drawing from Philippians 3 and Revelation 22, he explains that the term “dogs” is not referring to household pets but to individuals who, through their words and actions, are destructive, divisive and spiritually dangerous.

“Beware of dogs. Beware of evil workers,” he says, quoting Philippians. He emphasizes that these “dogs” symbolize people with unclean spirits—those who attack others with their words and stir up strife, often under the guise of righteousness. Stone clarifies, “I’m not talking about beware of your pet... I’m talking about people who are vicious with the words of their mouth.”

Throughout Scripture, dogs are used figuratively. Jesus once told a Gentile woman, “I cannot give the children’s bread to the dogs,” using the term as a cultural reference to the uncircumcised and those outside the covenant. Stone notes, “It was a degrading term for Gentiles.” Yet, even then, the woman’s humble reply moved Jesus: “Even the dogs want the crumbs from the master’s table.”

Beyond cultural context, dogs also symbolize spiritual impurity. “The Bible talks about the pig returning to the mire and the dog returning to its vomit,” he explains, warning that some who claim to follow Christ still harbor viciousness in their hearts.

Social media becomes another battleground, as Stone cautions against following “people who are absolutely fruitless... who are not helping anyone to get healed of their wounds.” He highlights the danger of those who “lie in hypocrisy”—people who repeat harmful things without verifying truth, motivated by a desire to damage reputations.

In a vivid illustration, Stone recalls a mangy dog barking furiously at a train, trying to stop it with noise and aggression. “Does that dog barking actually think he can stop the momentum of an iron beast called a train?” The metaphor is clear: critics may bark, but they can’t stop God’s plan.

His final encouragement echoes with bold faith: “Let the dogs bark, but let the train roll on.” In other words, don’t be deterred by gossip, slander or opposition—God’s purpose will prevail.

In a time when criticism, slander and spiritual compromise run rampant—even within the church—Perry Stone’s message is a wake-up call to stay focused, stay pure and stay the course. The noise of opposition may grow louder, but it holds no power over the momentum of a life anchored in God’s purpose.

Amanda Grace: How a Horse Named 'Sovereignty' and a New Pope Are Tied to Prophecy

Is there a spiritual war raging over motherhood?

In a message to his Beth-Israel congregation, Jonathan Cahn explained why the cultural assault against motherhood has great implications in the spiritual realm, and how Christians can combat this today.

A Wake-Up Call for Society

As Cahn points out, the role of a mother has been synonymous with the nurturing, protection and provision of life. However, modern movements have sought to diminish the importance of motherhood, particularly with the rise of feminist ideologies, the redefinition of gender roles and increasingly liberal policies. This societal change threatens the very foundation of family life, and it is crucial that we recognize and understand the profound impact of this shift.

Motherhood, as God intended, is a sacred calling that cannot be replaced or redefined. A woman's natural role as the giver of life, nurturer and protector is integral to the survival and flourishing of families and society. However, a war against these foundational values is being waged on multiple fronts, with the push for abortion rights, the blurring of gender lines, and the devaluation of the family unit. These cultural attacks not only undermine motherhood but also contribute to a spiritual crisis, one that is centered on rejecting the life-giving nature of women.

The Rise of a Culture of Death

Cahn notes that one of the most alarming trends in society today is the cultural shift away from the value of life and toward the promotion of death. Abortion, which directly contradicts the very essence of motherhood, has been politically and culturally celebrated in many circles as a woman's right, but it fundamentally undermines the sanctity of life. The termination of a pregnancy erases a mother's unique role and sacrifices the potential of life that she carries.

This shift, fueled by the sexual revolution and modern feminism, has ultimately led to a society where fertility rates are plummeting, and the essence of motherhood is being relegated to the background.

"The rates of fertility childbirth in our in the western world have been collapsing," says Cahn. "Now you even have a now more radical war against motherhood and against womanhood."

The Redefinition of Womanhood

In recent times, society has taken aim not only at traditional motherhood but also at the very definition of what it means to be a woman. The cultural war against women has escalated as gender identities become more fluid and less tied to biological sex. Movements that encourage men to transition into women and vice versa have led to the erasure of women's unique identity and role in society. Terms like "birthing people" are now being used to redefine what it means to be a mother, further distancing the concept of motherhood from the natural, biological function it was always intended to fulfill.

“It is it’s erasing womanhood,” says Cahn. “At the same time, you can’t erase reality... motherhood is a sacred thing, it’s of God.”

In light of the ongoing cultural battles, it is more important than ever to honor and protect the institution of motherhood. The challenges faced by mothers are not merely cultural or societal; they are spiritual.

As society continues to redefine gender roles and attack the value of life, the Christian community must stand firm in its belief that motherhood is sacred and should be upheld as one of the highest callings. By nurturing and protecting the family, we honor not only mothers but the Creator who designed the family as the bedrock of human civilization.

A New Pope and a Prophetic Era: Amanda Grace Weighs In on Pope Leo XIV

Have we just turned the page on a brand-new prophetic era?

Now that the cardinal conclave has elected a new pope, Leo XIV, Amanda Grace is sharing her stunning insights on what this means from a spiritual perspective.

“In an incredibly historic moment, and prophetic moment, a new pope has been chosen. And this new pope is an American pope. Cardinal Robert Francis Prevost has been chosen. For the first time ever in history, an American pope has been chosen,” says Grace.

Grace points out what most people have missed: the prophetic meaning behind the new pope’s chosen name.

“He has taken the name Leo XIV. Leo is the lion. Lion XIV. Highly prophetic, highly profound. And the reason why this is happening, I had said in a recent broadcast that the new pope was going to be a sign of the times.”

Grace points to the biblical election that took place in November here in America as a catalyst for major shifts happening in the spiritual realm.

“It triggered a changing of the guard that was going to affect the entire earth. And from that election and President Trump taking his second term, we now see an American pope being chosen for the first time ever,” she says.

Grace further notes that the choosing of the new pope took place between Passover and Pentecost, which is a 50-day window.

“50 is the Jubilee where there are reversals,” says Grace. “So, you have fire for Pentecost, and you have the lion, Leo XIV.”

She believes this is key to a critical two-year period that we are entering into.

“The lion is taking the position of pope,” Grace says. “And it’s an American. It’s all connected.”

As Amanda Grace boldly declares, this moment is not just a political or religious milestone—it is a prophetic shift of global significance. From the rise of an American pope to the symbolic timing between Passover and Pentecost, every detail points to a divine orchestration unfolding on the world stage.

The Truth About Tongues: What Most Churches Aren’t Telling You

Rabbi Kirt Schneider has spoken out in strong support of the U.S. Supreme Court’s decision to uphold former President Donald Trump’s ban on transgender individuals serving in the military. Referencing his international campaign, Taking the Rainbow Back, which launched over two years ago, Rabbi Schneider says he is “thrilled” by the ruling, calling it “common sense stuff.”

Quoting Deuteronomy 22:5, Schneider emphasizes the biblical foundation for maintaining the distinction between male and female: "A woman shall not wear man's clothing, nor shall a man put on women's clothing. Whoever does these things is an abomination to the Lord your God."

He argues that these lines drawn by God in creation are not only sacred but essential to the health and stability of society. "There is intelligent design in creation," he says, warning against allowing emotions or cultural trends to override God's word.

The issue of war on gender is something Schneider dives into in his latest book, Decoding the Torah, where he explores more than one hundred laws from Genesis to Deuteronomy and their application for today's believers. On the topic of gender, he writes that "the differences between maleness and femaleness are to be celebrated and preserved," warning that ignoring these distinctions leads to "confusion and societal chaos."

Not only is this a cultural battle, but Schneider sees the prophetic implications of what it could mean for Christians to support the truth in a society built up by immorality. In a dream, Schneider saw himself being removed from a governmental assembly and briefly jailed for speaking the truth. Despite the threat of further consequences, he still feels compelled to speak out on behalf of young boys and men who are growing up in a culture that denies gender differences. "They're being told that there are no differences," he says. "That maleness and femaleness are the same thing."

Arguing that transgender inclusion weakens military readiness, Schneider recalls his own experience as a youth on a male wrestling team. "It was all men. I would have been heartbroken if they had allowed a woman onto the men's wrestling team." He claimed that male-only environments build strength and identity, while mixed settings compromise both.

Quoting Trump's spokesperson, he notes that the president's decision was about restoring a military focused on "readiness and lethality, not DEI, diversity, equity, and inclusion or some woke gender ideology." According to Schneider, "merging the sexes together weakens men and it weakens women."

Above all, Schneider issues a strong call for men to reclaim their God-given role: "Be men. Take your manhood back." He believes that biblical masculinity brings security to women and restores the harmony God intended between the sexes. "Your wife doesn't want you to follow them... They want you to lead."

In a culture increasingly shaped by shifting ideologies, Rabbi Schneider's message stands as a clear and uncompromising call to return to the foundations of biblical truth. As debates around identity and morality continue to intensify, his challenge to believers is simple yet urgent: embrace God's original blueprint, stand firm in truth and refuse to be silenced by the voices of confusion.
