

They Told Her to Sell Her Soul to the Devil. This is What Happened.

When fame and fortune come calling, what is a person to do?

On a recent episode of the We Need to Talk Podcast with Ezekiel Azonwu, Christina and Stephon Chaney shared their testimonies of how God took them out of the pit and darkness and into the light. For Christina, that included some major demonic battles within the music industry.

Raised in a Pentecostal church, Chaney always knew about God, but she drifted far from the foundation laid in her youth. Her career took center stage, and while she kept a belief in God tucked away in her heart, she lived as if He could wait. That all changed when the darkness she once danced around suddenly became terrifyingly real.

The first major supernatural encounter came during a private conversation with a top producer. He casually suggested that she could have it all—if she'd just sell her soul. "When he said that, it was like my ears opened," Chaney recalls. "I heard it spiritually. I dropped to my knees. I was so convicted. I was like, God, this is real."

From that moment, the spiritual warfare intensified. Chaney began experiencing paralyzing nightmares. "I had sleep paralysis all the time. Demonic dreams," she said. "I had a lot of anxiety. There was always a tightness in my chest.” Despite trying to calm herself through all kinds of compromise, the attacks persisted.

This included when Chaney came face-to-face with a demonic presence in what she can only describe as astral projection.

“I’m like, ‘Oh no, I died in my sleep. Oh no, no, no, I’m going to hell. Oh no, no, no,’” Chaney says. “No, it’s too late. No, it’s too late.” I’m like, “No, no, God, forgive me, Lord Jesus.”

Now, as Chaney started to repent, she said that the enemy told her to “shut up.” This, she says he did so as if he was in a hurry. From here, Chaney not only knew that there was a real enemy after her soul, but she knew that the only way forward was with Christ.

It wasn’t an overnight transformation, but the veil had been lifted. Music—once her god—was now exposed as a vehicle that could either carry life or death. “Music is a weapon,” she said. “It’s spiritual. It opens you up.”

Angels, Demons and Media: Blake Healy's Eye-Opening Revelation on Spiritual Warfare

Blake Healy, known for his ability to see in the spirit realm, shared insight into the spiritual dynamics that influence everyday life.

In an interview with Charisma Media, he explained how spiritual beings, both angels and demons, interact with us daily, often in subtle but impactful ways.

On Apr. 29, 2025—President Trump's 100th day in office—he issued a proclamation that may mark a pivotal prophetic moment in America's spiritual history. This date was not just symbolic politically; it also coincided with the 418th anniversary of the First Landing in Cape Henry, Virginia, where America was first dedicated to the Lord in 1607. Many believe that moment was a sacred covenant with God—one now being reaffirmed by a modern leader.

Here are seven prophetic markers from Trey Smith on recent events and revelations that many in the body of Christ are watching closely:

1. A Reaffirmed National Covenant

Trump's official proclamation restored the First Landing dedication into the National Archives for the first time in U.S. history. It acknowledged the original words spoken by the Jamestown settlers who declared this land would be used to spread the Gospel and raise up godly generations. That covenant is now publicly recognized, signaling a spiritual realignment with America's foundational purpose.

2. The 100-Day Marker

Biblically, numbers matter—and the number 100 often points to fullness or divine completion. Tuesday, Apr. 29, marked Trump's 100th day back in office, a date chosen to publicly renew the covenant. Prophetic voices see this as more than coincidence—rather, a divine affirmation of timing and mission.

3. The Two-Term Prophecy

Prophets like Kim Clement and others spoke of Trump serving two terms, with the second coming after a dark stretch—what some call the “Trump Train” passing through a tunnel into light. That tunnel may now be behind us, with the second term representing a season of exposure, restoration and national repentance.

4. The Blood and the Anointing

After the assassination attempt where Trump was shot in the right ear and bled from the right hand—many saw spiritual parallels to the Old Testament anointing of priests, who had blood placed on the right ear, thumb and toe. Some see that moment as a divine marking: a physical anointing for a spiritual assignment.

5. The Prophetic Word for 2027

Kim Clement's final prophecies pointed toward 2027 as a year of exposure and national shaking. He saw betrayal at the highest levels, but also revival—an Elijah-like return of hearts between generations. With 2027 marking the 420th anniversary of First Landing, many believe that moment will bring further fulfillment of these words.

6. The Hidden Serpent and Coming Shaking

Clement prophesied of a "serpent in the White House" that would be exposed, causing the nation to shake. That shaking, he declared, would be good for America—part of God's process of purification and truth. Prophets say we are entering this period now.

7. The Return to Apostolic Christianity

This season is not just political—it's spiritual. Many believe the church must return to the simplicity and power of the early church: discipleship, covenant, and mission. Without strong foundations, no structure can stand. God is calling His people back to the basics—before He builds something new.

As the prophetic puzzle comes together, one truth remains: God reveals His plans to His servants the prophets (Amos 3:7). And right now, the call is clear—return, rebuild and prepare for what's ahead.

Weaver says that the children were praying at the altar, consumed by the Holy Spirit.

"One of them tapped me and said, 'I'm ready to be baptized,'" Weaver recounts. From here, many children agreed, saying that they were ready to be baptized.

"This is revival!" Weaver says.

One of the children who was inside the baptism tank noted that they wanted to be baptized so they could "glorify God."

What we're witnessing is nothing short of a Holy Spirit outpouring among the next generation—bold, unfiltered, and pure. These children aren't responding to hype; they're responding to the presence of God. This comes right before Jenny Weaver's Summer of Souls beach event happening May 10.

Prophecy in Action? What Kim Clement Saw for 2025

For over 50 years, Ray Comfort has shared a message of repentance, stressing its foundational role in the gospel. Now, he is asking a key question: Has he been right or wrong about the role of repentance after all these years of ministry?

A growing number of modern teachers suggest that repentance is simply a change of mind about Jesus—an intellectual acknowledgment rather than a moral or spiritual shift. But Comfort firmly rejects this interpretation. He insists that true repentance is a decisive turning from sin to God, not a vague mental adjustment. It involves the heart, the will and the direction of one's life.

“Repentance is a subject I’ve preached for 50 years. I have seen, as I’ve studied the Word of God, how crucial it is. You cannot ignore it, and you cannot substitute anything else for it,” Comfort says.

The debate surrounding repentance revolves around two differing views: one that sees it as “a simple change of mind, especially about Jesus,” and another, which Comfort supports, viewing it as “a decisive turning from sin to God.” He insists that repentance is not optional but “absolutely essential for salvation.”

This understanding is not new. It is rooted in church history and echoed by voices across generations. The Puritan Thomas Watson described repentance as a grace of God’s Spirit that produces both inward humility and visible reformation. Charles Spurgeon called it a hatred and forsaking of sin. Evangelist D.L. Moody emphasized that repentance requires not just sorrow, but a turning and forsaking of sin altogether. And George Whitefield insisted that repentance must include a firm resolution to abandon sin.

These leaders did not view repentance as a work, but as a vital response to the work of grace. According to Comfort, true repentance is the evidence of a changed heart and the mark of someone who has truly encountered Christ.

Comfort also spoke directly on justification. “Justification is not a process. You don’t gradually give up sin and then become saved. That would be salvation by works. Regeneration is an instantaneous act accomplished by God's grace. When you repent by turning from sin and forsaking it in your heart and mind and believe the gospel, you are saved instantly."

"The Gospel is that Jesus paid the penalty for sin... The death of Christ is essential," Comfort says. However, salvation becomes real only when a person repents and trusts in Jesus: "Repentance means you turn from sin, but you also trust in Jesus Christ as Savior and Lord."

This repentance is the only way to truly be saved from eternal separation from God. "If you don't repent, you die in your sins and you end up in hell. But if you'll simply repent of your sins, turn from them and trust in Jesus... God will grant you everlasting life."

Repentance is essential, not just as a change of mind, but as a decisive turning toward God, forsaking sin and putting our trust in Jesus Christ. This foundational truth of the gospel—rooted in centuries of biblical teaching—reminds us that salvation is not a gradual process but an instantaneous gift, available to all who repent and believe.

As we reflect on the depth and urgency of repentance, may we each be moved to examine our hearts, turn from our ways and place our faith in the one who paid the ultimate price for our redemption.
