

Chernobyl and the Bible: Jonathan Cahn Reveals a Shocking Prophetic Connection

In a powerful and deeply personal testimony, Rabbi Kirt Schneider shares his harrowing journey from despair into the marvelous light of Jesus Christ. His story is one of supernatural deliverance, revealing the relentless love of God that reaches into the deepest pits of hopelessness.

Schneider recounts the chilling season of his life when he was tormented by oppressive darkness. Plagued by fear, anxiety and overwhelming depression, he vividly describes sensing the devil himself laughing at him—sadistically mocking his suffering. Trapped in a mental and spiritual abyss, he wrestled with the reality of his vulnerability and the looming fear of death.

“I literally sense[d] the devil laying over me, laughing at me and sadistically making me laugh at myself,” Schneider recounts. “In my sleep one night, I saw inside my brain and there was pitch blackness inside my head. And I understood that God was telling me that you were completely trapped, living under the darkness. But now, I’m carving out through that darkness, a way into the light, a way into me.”

A Life-Changing Encounter

But God was already carving a way out.

In 1978, at the age of 20, Schneider had a life-altering vision of Jesus. Despite having no prior Christian background—being raised in a Jewish home—he supernaturally recognized the crucified Christ. In the vision, a radiant red beam of light from heaven pierced the scene, illuminating the Messiah and filling Schneider with sudden, inexplicable hope. It was the first step in his lifelong journey of redemption.

“I knew nothing about Jesus,” says Schneider. “But when this happened to me, suddenly, I found myself in a state of supernatural awareness.”

The Battle for Freedom

However, his deliverance did not happen overnight. Schneider emphasizes that walking in the fullness of God’s light is a process that requires active partnership with the Lord. Quoting 1 Peter 2:9, he highlights that believers are called out of darkness into God’s marvelous light, but this transformation demands perseverance.

With raw honesty, he describes the battle of reprogramming his mind with God’s truth. Like an elite athlete training for victory, he immersed himself in Scripture, saturating his thoughts with the promises of God. Through consistent prayer, worship and Bible meditation, he gradually learned to discern between the voices of darkness and the voice of the Holy Spirit.

Fighting Back with Truth

Schneider encourages others battling mental oppression—whether anxiety, fear, OCD or depression—to fight back with spiritual tenacity. He speaks of resisting the lies of the enemy and actively clinging to God’s promises.

The process, he says, is gradual but life-transforming. The more Schneider himself has pursued the Lord, the more freedom he has experienced. The light of Jesus has brought him into profound freedom, identity, and purpose.

Schneider’s message is clear: no matter how deep the darkness, God’s light is greater. Through faith, persistence and the power of the Holy Spirit, true freedom is possible.

“The first time that I faced the enemy working through lies, false accusations, was shocking,” she says. “When you care, when you’re really serving God and you’re carrying anointing, you have a target on your back. The devil has a target on your back. You’re doing the most damage to his kingdom when you carry the power of God.

“But the Lord has strengthened me. He’s helped me. He’s taught me a lot. One thing He has taught me is about picking up our cross. He’s taught me in His Word, how He reveals to us we will have persecution. He reveals to us that we will be He says, ‘Blessed are you who are persecuted for righteousness’ sake.”

Krick also asserts that these trials are part of the cost of the anointing and what it means to be a disciple of Christ. For Krick, that has included dealing with scammers and impersonators who use her identity. This is something she says she uses vigilance with, warning others on her livestreams not to fall prey to these fake accounts.

“They’ll use my name and picture, have these fake profiles, and they’ll direct message people saying it’s me, that you need to sow a seed to an orphanage in order to have this attack from the enemy not happen to you," she reveals.

Krick says dealing with the scammers and impersonators has been key for learning how to die to self and her ego, to lead the life and ministry she believes is a call on her life. She further discusses how proper stewardship and generosity is a call that we have been given to see the captives set free.

"In the Word it says, 'freely you have received, freely give.' So, for every minister and every believer we should never be charging someone to pray for them," Krick explains. "When we cast demons out and heal the sick, that is a free gift that God is giving to the people through us, and we give to the people our time and our efforts and our ministry."

Working hand-in-hand with the proper stewardship necessary for biblical ministry includes seeing the fruit of true ministers and prophets of the gospel.

"The first part is the character, the fruit of the Holy Spirit in a believer or minister's life," says Krick. "Fruit of the Holy Spirit; they should be Christ-like, they should be patient, generous, they should be loving, not just to those who are kind to them, but to their enemies. They should be peaceful. They should be slow to anger, not angry, not judgmental, but instead giving people the benefit of the doubt, not quick to judge but letting God be the judge, being full of joy and sacrificing of themselves..."

The second item of evidence in a minister's life, Krick says, should be the fruit of the ministry itself. She believes that the biblical command to cast out demons and heal the sick are vital, and even more important, is the testimonies that come out of those who have been set free.

“We should be looking at the testimonies. That’s how you know if true fruit in a minister’s life,” says Krick. “It’s so important we take the Word seriously and just look at the fruit.”

Above all, Krick calls for Christians to surrender fully to God, following the biblical principles to cast out demons, heal the sick and proclaim the Word of God.

“Jesus has come to destroy the works of the devil. And so so many people are struggling with things, addiction, depression, anxiety, tormenting dreams, insomnia, many sicknesses, mental disorders,” says Krick. “All of these things the root is demonic oppression and deliverance is what is needed, the casting out of demons. Many believers need deliverance, and so that’s why the Lord’s led me to write this book, to share with people how to be set free.”

You Won't Believe What Just Happened: A Miracle Like No Other!

Is anything too hard for the Lord? (Gen. 18:14).

At 76 years old, Medhin Hagos experienced a miracle like no other. She just had a baby.

That's right, at 76, Hagos, who resides in Ethiopia, just had a child after she stopped trying decades ago.

In a new video by Richard Lorenzo Jr., he shared this remarkable news, and how just as God showed up and provided a family for Sarah and Elizabeth in Scripture, God is still able to do these fantastic miracles today.

For nearly a century, Disney has been synonymous with magic, wonder and timeless storytelling. Its first full-length animated feature, "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," released in 1937, was more than a technical marvel, it was a cultural milestone.

In a new video, Pastor Greg Laurie discussed Disney's remake of "Snow White," which has stirred up controversy because of the themes displayed in it that differ from the original film.

Laurie believes this rendition of the classic film misses the mark. The new version, starring Rachel Zegler, abandons the original's themes of romance, redemption and moral triumph. Zegler dismissed the 1937 classic as "extremely dated" and criticized its depiction of love, calling the prince's pursuit of Snow White "weird." The remake instead focuses on female empowerment, replacing the iconic song "Someday My Prince Will Come" with "Waiting on a Wish"—a modern anthem of self-sufficiency.

Laurie argues that stripping away the love story robs the film of its deeper, symbolic meaning. The original story was more than a fairy tale—it was a moral fable, echoing biblical truths. Snow White's resurrection from her death-like sleep by the prince mirrors the Christian hope of redemption, paralleling Christ's victory over sin and death. Replacing this message with a self-reliant narrative undermines the timeless values the story once conveyed.

Yet, Laurie sees a glimmer of hope. For the first time in two decades, Disney has introduced an openly Christian character. In the animated series "Win or Lose" on Disney+, one of the characters offers a heartfelt prayer.

Laurie views this as a small but meaningful step—an acknowledgment that faith still holds a place in storytelling.

"I want to believe that Disney can find it's way back to what it was meant to be," says Laurie. "If there's any chance of that happening, the best thing Disney today could do is return to the roots of its founder to stories that celebrate family, virtue and faith.”

Will Disney give up its wokeness and turn around for the good? We will just have to wait and see.

Mike Thompson: God is Revealing This Urgent Message for America!

“It is no longer I who live, but Christ who lives in me,” (Gal. 2:20).

When we say “yes” to Jesus everything changes. In a profound new teaching, Rabbi Kirt Schneider discusses why Christians are now to live in a different reality, ascending to one guided and directed by God’s perfect light instead of the encroaching darkness of this world.

Each of us experiences life uniquely, shaped by our own reality. But as we grow in the spirit, we slowly break free from the strongholds that once bound us.

For some, like Rabbi Kirt Schneider, that stronghold was anger. At first, the anger seemed justified—fueled by blame and self-righteousness. But as the Holy Spirit brought conviction, he recognized the need to resist. Through spiritual warfare, he gained strength. With each battle won, he walked into deeper peace, greater love and brighter light.

“I had to build strength in the Spirit by resisting,” says Schneider. “God has called you and I out of darkness into His marvelous light.”

Jesus calls us to be overcomers. Revelation declares that those who conquer will inherit God’s promises. This is no passive faith—it is a daily battle against the world, the flesh, and the enemy. Yet, with every step forward, our perception of reality changes as we experience more of God’s presence.

As we overcome, we are transformed, reflecting more of Christ. So, press on with boldness—there is always more of His glorious light ahead.
