

Charlie Shamp: Why This is the Hour of Supernatural Abundance

Our fight is not against flesh and blood, but rather against powers and principalities.

In a stirring conversation, prophetic leaders Jeremiah Johnson and Alexander Pagani delivered a powerful warning to the body of Christ, addressing the dangers of exposure culture, the rise of deception and the need for bold discernment in this hour.

In a time when the church has become obsessed with exposure and no redemption, the two point out how this obsession is now teetering into dangerous territory.

“All believers are called to provide some accountability and correction,” says Pagani. “I think they’ve gone from being a watchman to the people to trying to be a start going into dangerous territory of the unauthorized.”

Johnson points out that there is a balance between standing up for righteousness and justice, and acting as a judge.

“You have maybe an imbalance here, where we’re the Holy Ghost police on everyone and anyone, and we’re using our social media, using our platform to just to blast everyone and anyone.”

They warn that the misuse of terms like “abuse” and “trauma” also contributes to the growing confusion, as legitimate cases of harm are diluted by false accusations based on hurt feelings or disagreements.

The result is a culture that destroys lives without regard for the truth. Johnson and Pagani urge believers to recognize the need for balance and redemption, stressing that while exposure can sometimes be necessary, the ultimate goal should be restoration not destruction.

Ministries must approach this delicate matter with justice, grace and accountability, resisting the temptation to celebrate the fall of others.

It is a time for careful discernment, a commitment to justice tempered with grace and a renewed focus on the ultimate goal of redemption. As the Body of Christ, we are reminded that our actions should reflect God's heart for restoration, not destruction, and that true justice always seeks healing, not harm.

In a time when faith-based media is making a significant cultural impact, The Chosen continues to stand out as a beacon of hope and inspiration.

With its new season on the horizon, fans are eagerly anticipating the return of Jonathan Roumie, whose portrayal of Jesus has captivated millions around the globe. When asked by Sunny Hostin about what brings Jesus to a place of righteous anger in the latest season, Roumie graciously responds by giving insight into the historical element of what it would have been like during the time of Roman Empire and the Pharisaical Jewish leaders.

"Hypocrisy within the temple establishment," Roumie says. "Seeing religious leaders basically subvert the meaning behind and the practices of His faith and extort the poorest of the poor."

Roumie also talked about how living out his faith is key for playing Jesus and for growing as a person.

“It comes down to making sure that I’m right in my own relationship with God,” Roumie says. “For me, that means acting out my faith, practicing my faith.”

As The Chosen: Last Supper release approaches next week on Mar. 28, Roumie hopes the series continues to stir hearts and build bridges. As Roumie ventures out to secular venues like The View and even Jimmy Fallon, he is reminding us all that Jesus wants the hearts of all.

Cindy Clemishire Calls Out Robert Morris’ Shocking Plea—Christian Community in Uproar

Cindy Clemishire has responded to Robert Morris’ “not guilty” plea following his surrender to authorities after he was indicted for five counts of lewd or indecent acts with a child for sexually abusing Clemishire, which started when she was only 12.

Clemishire told the Christian Post that Morris' "not guilty" plea did not catch her off-guard.

"It did not surprise is my understanding any attorney would advise their client to plead not guilty. It gives the criminal the opportunity to negotiate a plea," she told the Post.

Since Morris' plea, other people across the internet have also taken different stances on this tragic story.

Comments on Charisma Magazine's social media platforms have varied greatly. Many are calling for prayer for Morris, while others see this as God's righteous judgment taking place.

"This continued for four years, not guilty, disgusting," one commentor wrote.

"It's so sad and shocking. He was a good preacher," another says.

While others brought up the divisiveness of the comments themselves among those who had differing opinions about the case.

"Check your pockets. A sin is a sin even though the world doesn't judge it that way, but God does and will."

As the body of Christ, the most important thing we can do right now is not to divide from one another, but join in prayer for all those involved in this horrific scenario, including Gateway during this devastating time for their church family.

You Won't Believe Who's NOT the Antichrist—Debunking Popular Theories!

Is Europe setting the stage for the coming Antichrist?

In a recent episode of “Countdown 2 Eternity,” pastors James Kaddis and Tom Hughes unfolded biblical prophecy and how Europe may just be a key player for the ushering in of the Antichrist, and ultimately, Jesus’ Second Coming.

Both Kaddis and Hughes observed that the European Union is positioning itself as a superstate with its own military, as evidenced by recent developments, including Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky’s interactions with President Donald Trump. These moves, they argued, are part of a larger strategy to place Europe at the center of global affairs.

Kaddis and Hughes raised concerns about Zelensky's role in the conflict, suggesting that Ukraine is being manipulated by more powerful forces. They described the situation as a geopolitical puppet show, where both the U.S. and European interests are steering the course of events, with Ukraine caught in the middle of the power struggle.

Perhaps one of the hidden concerns that most people don't focus on in regard to Europe is the rise of Islam across the continent, which has occurred largely due to the open borders policy in the nations there. Hughes and Kaddis point to this increase of Islam, as well as tensions with Gaza, as a direct threat against against Judaism and Christianity. This, they warned, could pave the way for the rise of the "beast" leader mentioned in biblical prophecy, signaling the approach of the end times.

"The problem of Gaza has everything to do destruction of the Jewish state and the destruction of Jews all over the world," Kaddis says.

While these global issues continue to heat up, Kaddis and Hughes point to Trump as a key for what happens next in Europe, and across the world. They point out that because Trump is not a fan of the globalist agenda, he ultimately is holding nations accountable for their actions, including those that may try to form a one-world government.

"He stands against what the whole world is going toward," says Kaddis.

In light of all kinds of rapid developments, Kaddis and Hughes urged Christians to stay alert and grounded in their faith. As the geopolitical landscape evolves, it's becoming increasingly clear that we could be on the brink of seeing prophecy fulfilled.

The stage is set, and now is the time for believers to hold fast to the hope of Christ's imminent return.

Can You Really Trust God? The Answer You Didn't Expect

Scripture tells us to trust in the Lord with all our hearts and He will make our paths straight (Prov. 3:5-6). So then, why is it so difficult for us to let go and allow God to do the work in our lives?

In his recent TikTok video, Kelly K got down into one of the nitty gritty questions that we all ask at some point: why is it so hard to let go and allow God to be God?

"Why is it so hard to hang on to God?" K asks.

@kellykministries/video/7480286451536612650?is_from_webapp=1&ender_device=pc&web_id=7376331489186743838

Perhaps, the reason, as K points out, is that we as people have the belief that clinging onto the Lord is our own responsibility, that we are the ones doing the hard work of securing our relationship with Him. The truth, though, is that as our Father, God is the one who has us in the palm of His hand.

“The truth is, your Father has a hold of you,” K says. “You’re not holding onto Him; He’s holding onto you. If we could just figure that out, we could let go.”

K points out that when our world feels like it’s been flipped upside-down, we must remember the truth that God is the One who fights for us.

“Our God is a gentleman. If you want to fight your battles, if you want to build your life, if you think you can do a better job than Him, He’ll let you,” K contends. “However, if you want to hand over control and you want to trust Him with your will.”

Ultimately, we all have the choice either to try to do things completely on our own, or surrender to God’s plans and purposes for our life, believing that whatever He has for us is better than what we could create on our own.

“If it feels like you are struggling to hold on to God, the best advice I could ever give you is [to] just let go,” he says.

True freedom comes when we release our grip and trust that God is holding us. Perhaps this is the moment for you to let go, surrender fully and allow Him to fight your battles, guide your steps and fulfill His perfect plan.
