In a brief clip, Pastor Greg Locke highlights what the church frequently misses about the essence of revival—how it begins and how it continues to grow. While packed services, baptisms, and altar calls may signal the Holy Spirit's movement, they are merely the outward signs of the deeper transformation God desires to spark within each heart.

Spiritual warfare is intensifying and it's no longer just about unseen battles between angels and demons. It also exists in the physical realm—what we eat, drink and breathe. Many people are harming their bodies while praying for healing, unaware that the enemy is attacking through unseen means.

In a recent livestream, Richard Lorenzo Jr. explained that because God's people are more engaged with eating all kinds of rich, unhealthy foods, we are mistreating our bodies, something that the Lord has given us to steward. Yet, when we miss taking care of our bodies, we also are opened to spiritual warfare from the enemy.

The Bible is clear: "My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge" (Hos. 4:6). Without understanding, people fall into deception, consuming things that poison their bodies and weaken their spiritual strength. But just as lack of knowledge leads to destruction, Scripture also teaches that knowledge brings deliverance. This is why seeking wisdom and revelation from God is crucial.

"We're in a time of biological warfare," Lorenzo says. "The devil is using what we're eating, drinking and breathing in as a way to kill us."

If we wouldn't worship in a dirty, roach-infested church, why are we allowing these toxins into our bodies? Many consume fast food, processed meals and harmful chemicals daily, damaging the very vessel God entrusted to them.

"People in the world, in New Age witchcraft...[are] eating natural things, organic herbs, greens and fruits and vegetables, but then the body of Christ is [not]," Lorenzo says. "What you do matters. There are consequences, whether good or bad to everything we do."

Mystery Unveiled: Is This What Really Happened When Moses Parted the Red Sea?

Right now, scientists who have been looking at the Red Sea uncovered something no one was expecting: death traps.

According to Fox News, these “natural death traps,” which are brine pools thousands of feet below the surface of the Gulf of Aqaba, were found where it is most commonly believed that God supernaturally used Moses to part the Red Sea.

It is believed the waters of this area could be “10 times saltier than normal seawater” with little oxygen, killing most of the aquatic life there, according to Fox.

In the study conducted by Sam Purkis from the University of Miami, it was discovered that these “death pools” just may be the key to finding something no one would have expected: extraterrestrial creatures.

So, could species unknown be in the depths of these waters? And if these “death pools” are truly this deep, might there be some clues as to what happened when Moses parted the Red Sea?

When Moses stretched his hand over the Red Sea, the Lord moved back the waters by the wind, and the Israelites could walk on dry ground. However, when the Egyptians chased after them, Exodus 14:28 says, “The waters returned and covered the chariots, and the horsemen, and all the host of Pharaoh that came into the sea after them. There remained not so much as one of them.”

Incredibly deep waters with this high of a salt content would have likely ensured the Egyptians’ imminent peril. Not only would they have drowned, but surviving would have been impossible.

Children Miraculously Healed from HIV, Blindness

Did the American government just confirm that demons are real?

In a stunning revelation, newly declassified CIA documents confirm what many believers have long suspected: the supernatural realm is real, and demonic forces are actively at work in our world today. Among the trove of recently released government files, one document titled “The Poltergeist and Cultural Values” sheds light on chilling encounters with unseen entities, aligning with biblical teachings on spiritual warfare.

The document, which analyzes two poltergeist cases—one in Brazil and another in the United States—offers a stark contrast between how different cultures interpret supernatural disturbances.

As Christian leader Mike Signorelli describes, the Brazilian case involved a Pentecostal family experiencing unexplained phenomena such as moving objects, eerie noises and even physical attacks. Recognizing these events as demonic, the family turned to their spiritual leaders, who anointed the home with oil and engaged in fervent prayer.

“This is from the CIA,” Signorelli says. “This is an official government document that’s substantiating the reality that anointing a home with oil can bring relief when there’s demonic warfare conducted by the pastor actually worked in this instance.”

In contrast, the American case centered around a young boy whose household experienced similar paranormal activity. However, instead of acknowledging the spiritual dimension, researchers in the U.S. dismissed the events as psychokinesis—the supposed ability of the human mind to move objects unconsciously. This stark difference highlights how cultures may explain away spiritual warfare with psychological or scientific reasoning, leaving many vulnerable to unseen influences.

“Here’s what this tells us,” Signorelli says. “Western culture often dismisses the supernatural. They’ll call it like some kind of psychic ability while other cultures will acknowledge spiritual warfare and actively fight.”
