

Pageant Crowns Robot as Beauty Queen

The definition of beauty has been forever altered.

The latest beauty pageant winner is not female, and not even a man disguised as a woman. This time, the fairest in all the land is a robot.

Yes, that's right; a robot has taken the crown for its beauty.

As CNN reported, the world's first ever artificial intelligent beauty pageant commenced and crowned Kenza Layli, the "Moroccan lifestyle influencer who hopes to bring 'diversity and inclusivity' to the AI creator landscape."

The robot beauty queen not only wants to make a difference in the virtual world, but Layli desires to make sure "everyone has a seat at the table of technological progress."

The images of Layli very eerily look like a real human being. In fact, Layli has 204,000 Instagram followers. Those are real people who are choosing to follow a robot.

"We do not trust any promises made by GGWO given their repeated disparagement of victim-survivors, and the track-record of current leaders who have dismissed abuse and vilified any criticism of GGWO. They still have not taken any responsibility for the information that is already public or their continued pattern of victim-blaming," the post ended.

Prophetic Word: What's Next for Michelle Obama?

Every single one of us understands what it's like to not know something. However, the phrase "I don't know" has been used time and time again as an actual excuse to ignore and run away from making wise decisions.

In his wisdom sermon series, Apostle Alexander Pagani confronted the issues that arise when people refuse to seek out discernment and how Christians should approach the topic of knowledge.

"A sword that is not sharpened ends up becoming a dull sword," Pagani says. "And the Book of Ecclesiastes says, 'A sword that is dull you have to work extra hard.'"

Pagani points out that we as a people hate knowledge. However, knowledge does not automatically equate to something negative. While pride will warp the purpose of knowledge, learning and wisdom have great biblical implications.

“The Book of Hosea says this: we hate knowledge,” Pagani says. “Notice how God [doesn’t] say ‘My people perish for lack of anointing.’ Notice how God [doesn’t] say ‘my people perish for false prophecy and warlock.’ Notice how God doesn’t say, ‘My people perish because of the spirit of Jezebel and mermaid spirit. No, no no—God said, ‘My people perish for lack of knowledge.’”

Pagani says it is knowledge of who God is and how the Holy Spirit works that helps us increase in our strength. It is the willingness to learn and grow with the Lord that ultimately transforms our relationship with Him and the world around us for the best.

So, what then is the key to growing in strength and knowledge of the Lord?

“You’ve got to read that Bible,” Pagani says. “Once you start increasing in knowledge, see, you become strong.”
