

Ark of the Covenant Discovery? Why Its Return Could Signal God's End Times Plan

V1 Church Pastor Mike Signorelli also wrote about this powerful event, calling it a "historic moment."

A historic moment just shook Los Angeles.

The LA Coliseum wasn't filled for a concert.

It was filled for JESUS.

How do you explain what happens when hunger meets heaven?

When desperation collides with the presence of God?

You don't explain it. You witness it.

From nations across the earth, leaders and believers gathered not for hype, not for a moment but for a move of God.

This wasn't an event.

This was a declaration.

I had the honor of sharing my testimony and sounding the alarm:

WE ARE NOT WAITING FOR REVIVAL.

WE ARE THE REVIVAL GENERATION.

More moments from @hopefestla and @ coming soon.

History was made.

As the final echoes of worship faded from the Coliseum, one truth rang louder than any sound system ever could: God is still moving, still calling and still transforming lives in the most unlikely places. What took place at Hope Fest LA was more than a moment—it was a prophetic sign that awakening is not behind us, but ahead of us.

A generation is rising, not marked by fear or identity crisis, but by bold faith, renewed minds and a hunger for the presence of God.

Revival isn't coming—it's already here, and it's spreading.

Global

Blockades, Iran Tensions and Political Upheaval Signal Prophetic Collision

From the first pages of Genesis to the final vision of Revelation, one image appears again and again in Scripture: a gate. The Garden of Eden had one, guarded by cherubim and a flaming sword. The tabernacle had one. The temple had one. The New Jerusalem has 12.

The gate, Jonathan Cahn teaches, is not a footnote: it is the central thread of the entire Bible. And according to Jesus, most people never walk through it.

In Luke 13, a man asks Jesus directly: “Lord, are there only a few who are going to be saved?” Jesus doesn’t comfort him with a broad answer. He answers with a command: “Strive to enter in at the straight gate. For I tell you, many will seek to enter and will not be able.”

Doubt is complicated. Faith is go with the Word. – Jonathan Cahn

The Greek word translated “straight” also means “narrow,” and Cahn unpacks both meanings with precision. A straight life, he explains, is a consistent life. Your beliefs, your words and your actions all line up. There is no double-mindedness, no crooked back-and-forth with God. “Straightness is a path of purity because straight means it’s all 100%. There’s nothing that is not of it.”

To order Jonathan Cahn’s book, The Avatar, visit .

And the physics of it are stunning. A straight-moving rocket builds momentum and breaks through the atmosphere. One that zigzags loses power with every turn. "There may be breakthroughs you have not had because you're not going straight," Cahn says bluntly. Consistency isn't just a spiritual virtue. It is the mechanism of breakthrough.

Narrow, Cahn explains, is the Hebrew word linked to disciple, and discipleship requires discipline. Modern Christianity, he warns, has drifted from this. "He didn't just say save people. He said make disciples. We are to make disciples, but that starts with ourselves."

A narrow gate also does something most people don't want to hear: it doesn't allow for baggage. "Many people in the Lord bring baggage into the kingdom – baggage from their old life. The old attitude they never dropped off. The old manipulation, the old gossip, the old anger," says Cahn.

The gate is what divides the old life from the new. You cannot drag both through.

Ultimately, Cahn has a powerful call to action for the church: "Drop whatever you're holding on to that you shouldn't be holding on to. Drop the habit. Drop the hurt. Drop the wound. Drop the attitude. The gate is not for that."

Time, Cahn reminds his congregation, is not unlimited. Once the Master shuts the door, no amount of knocking will open it. "What you do on earth is going to affect eternity, forever. You only have a set time to affect forever. So make the most of it."

And yet, in all of this, Cahn refuses to leave the unlikely behind. God chose the weak, the atheist, the failure. Not despite their story, but because of it. "The more you turn it around from what you used to be, the more God is going to be glorified."

The eyes of the Lord are searching the entire earth looking for the one whose heart is completely his. You be that one. – Jonathan Cahn

Few enter. But those who do change the world. Gideon's army. Joshua and Caleb. David with a sling. God has never needed the majority. He has always needed the few who go all in. The narrow gate is not a punishment. It is an invitation to the most powerful life available to a human being.

Walk straight. Drop the baggage. Become the disciple. The gate is open – but it is narrow, and the time is now.

Why the Jewish Population Still Hasn't Recovered and What It Means for the End Times

Newly released figures reveal a sobering truth that cannot be ignored: the Jewish population has still not fully recovered from the devastation of World War II.

According to data reported by YNet Global, the global Jewish population currently stands at approximately 15.8 million, which is still below the 16.6 million recorded in 1939 before the Holocaust.

Decades later, the numbers tell a story that statistics alone cannot fully capture—a lingering void left by one of history's greatest tragedies.

A Dramatic Shift in Where Jews Live

While the total population has yet to rebound fully, where Jewish people live today tells a very different story.

The report notes that Israel is now home to roughly 7.2 million Jews, surpassing the 6.3 million living in the United States. Together, these two nations make up the overwhelming majority of the global Jewish population.

To order Kirt Schneider's new book, The Mystery of the Tabernacle, visit .

Other countries—including France, Canada, the United Kingdom and Argentina—continue to host Jewish communities, though some are shrinking due to migration and changing global dynamics.

What stands out most is this: the center of Jewish life has shifted back to Israel in a way that would have seemed unimaginable just a century ago.

The Final Chapter of a Living Generation

Another deeply moving aspect of the report is the focus on Holocaust survivors still living in Israel.

Approximately 111,000 survivors and victims of antisemitic persecution remain in Israel, most of them now in their 80s, 90s and beyond.

This is more than a statistic—it is a reminder that the generation that witnessed history's darkest hour firsthand is quickly passing from the earth.

Their presence is both a testimony and a warning.

From Dispersion to Destiny: What Scripture Foretold

These developments point to something far greater than demographics.

The Bible repeatedly speaks of a time when the Jewish people would be scattered—and then regathered. Passages in Ezekiel describe God bringing His people back into their land from the nations, while Isaiah speaks of a second regathering that would astonish the world.

That promise seemed distant for centuries.

But in 1948, with the rebirth of Israel, something shifted. A prophetic clock began ticking once again.

Before World War II, only a small percentage of the world's Jewish population lived in the land of Israel. Today, it holds the largest concentration of Jewish people on earth.

This is not random. It is remarkable.

A Prophetic Movement Happening Now

Even now, amid global unrest, rising antisemitism and regional conflict, Jewish people continue to return to Israel.

What was once a scattered people group is now being drawn back to its ancient homeland—just as Scripture declared would happen in the last days.

While the global population has not yet reached its pre-Holocaust numbers, the regathering itself is undeniable.

This is more than a historical trend. It is a living, unfolding sign.

And as the Jewish people continue to return to their land, one truth becomes increasingly clear: what God spoke long ago is not finished. It is unfolding—right before our eyes.

AI as ‘Child of God’ Sparks Concern Over New Moral Programming Push

As we continue to rush toward the very end of the age, the line between what is human and what is robotic is becoming increasingly blurred.

In a report by The Washington Post on MSN, it was noted that Anthropic, which owns the chatbot, Claude, recently met with a group of 15 Protestant and Catholic leaders, where the staff “...sought advice on how to steer Claude’s moral and spiritual development” in its process of reacting to “complex and unpredictable ethical queries.”

This, in turn, brought up the question of whether it is possible that Claude could be known as a “child of God.”

Catholic priest Brendan McGuire, who joined in the conversations, shared that “They’re growing something that they don’t fully know what it’s going to turn out as.” And that “We’ve got to build in ethical thinking into the machine so it’s able to adapt dynamically.”

This comes as the dangers about Anthropic’s Mythos continue to surface in the news, particularly regarding Anthropic’s findings in a model too dangerous to release to the public.

The Biblical Line That Cannot Be Crossed

As the world races toward an increasingly digital future, the boundary between human identity and artificial creation is becoming dangerously blurred.

Despite the philosophical debates and technological ambition, Scripture gives a clear and unshakable answer. Humanity alone was created in the image of God. From the very beginning, God breathed life into man—something no algorithm, no code and no artificial system has ever received.

AI may simulate conversation, replicate emotional tone and even process ethical dilemmas, but it does not possess a soul, a spirit or the divine imprint of God.

As innovation accelerates and headlines grow more unsettling, believers must remain grounded in what God has already established.

The image of God is not programmable, not transferable, and cannot be manufactured.

Trump Responds to Deleted Controversial Post as Antichrist Claims Surge

The viral post depicting President Donald Trump as Jesus has officially been deleted.

The missing post was noticed after the internet erupted with claims that the image was blasphemous and a mockery of God.

At the White House, the president responded to the comments about the image, stating that he didn't believe it depicted him as Jesus, but rather as a doctor.

"I did post it, and I thought it was me as a doctor and had to do with Red Cross, as a Red Cross worker, which we support," Trump told reporters. "Only the fake news could come up with that one."

Trump asked how "they came up with that one," and clarified that the image is meant to show him as a doctor, healing people.

“And I do make people better,” Trump said. “I make people a lot better.”

□ JUST NOW: President Trump RESPONDS to backlash over the now-deleted post

Q: Did you post that picture of yourself depicted as Jesus Christ?

TRUMP: "How did they come up with that? It's supposed to be me as a doctor making people better, and I do make people better and make..."

– Eric Daugherty (@EricLDaugh) April 13, 2026

Trump further declined the opportunity to apologize to Pope Leo, according to Fox News.

“No, I don't [apologize] because Pope Leo said things that are wrong,” Trump reportedly stated. “He was very much against what I'm doing with regard to think he's very weak on crime and other things.”

The deletion of this controversial post comes as screenshots of online commentators have gone viral, with many going full force against it. One user wrote, “You are mocking Jesus!!!”

Others believed the post could have been a sign regarding the Antichrist.

“The book of Revelations speaks of this, are you literally depicting yourself as a savior or messiah? Just asking as the book of Revelations tells us the antichrist will claim he is,” another stated.

” elected the antichrist,” yet another wrote.

While Trump maintains the image was misunderstood, the strong reactions on all sides reveal just how deeply people care about truth and the proper representation of Jesus Christ.

This situation reminds us of the importance of discernment, that we must keep our guard up at all times, no matter what may come.

Pay to Chat with Jesus? The New Blasphemous AI Tool Coming Near You

Just when you think things couldn't get any stranger, they do.

Hence, the new chatbot that allows you to speak to “Jesus,” of course, for a price.

In a new report by the Associated Press in the New York Post, the tech organization Just Like Me has created a chatbot avatar that is supposed to be like Jesus, available via video calls for $ per minute.

The CEO of the company, Chris Breed, stated that “You do feel a little accountable to the ‘re your friend. You’ve made an attachment.”

Chilling and creepy, right?

Breed further said that this AI model was trained on the KJV Bible and related sermons. According to the report, a package deal is $ for 45 minutes to be used in the month.

AI Religion Is Expanding—And So Is the Divide

This isn’t happening in a vacuum. The use of artificial intelligence for spiritual purposes is rapidly expanding across multiple religions. From AI-powered Buddhist chatbots offering meditation guidance to Hindu platforms experimenting with digital teachers and automated responses to spiritual questions, the trend is clear: technology is entering sacred territory.

But with that expansion comes a growing divide.

To order Amanda Grace’s new book, Brace For Impact, visit .

Some believe AI can serve as a helpful tool, aiding learning, reflection and outreach. Others, however, see something far more concerning: the replacement of authentic spiritual encounter with artificial imitation.

As these tools become more advanced, the tension is only increasing. What some call innovation, others see as deception.

Only Jesus Saves—Not Artificial Substitutes

No matter how advanced AI becomes, one truth remains unshaken: salvation does not come through technology.

A chatbot cannot forgive sin. An algorithm cannot redeem a soul. And no digital avatar—no matter how lifelike—can replace a real relationship with Jesus Christ.

Transformation doesn't happen through a screen. It happens in the secret place, through prayer, through the living and active Word of God, through worship and through time spent in the presence of the Lord. It is there that hearts are changed, minds are renewed, and lives are truly made new.

In a world increasingly filled with artificial voices, the call for believers is to return to the authentic one. Not a programmed response, but the voice of the Good Shepherd. Not a paid subscription, but a relationship that was already paid for on the cross.

In the end, no technology can offer what only Jesus can give: eternal life, true peace and the power to be completely transformed.
