

Did Tucker Carlson Just Suggest Sharia Law for the West? His Controversial Statements

Tucker Carlson continues to go down a deep, dark path, all while claiming to be a Christian.

In a recent interview with Michael Waddell on the Outdoor Channel, a clip is now going viral of Carlson where he praised societies governed by Sharia Law and condemned the West for living by different standards.

“...there’s not a single Western city that’s thriving,” Carlson says. “And they’re all degrading in exactly the same ‘s a lot of things, but it’s self-hatred”

Carlson believes that there has been a lost will for success in the West. “Every European city, every American city, people lose their will to live, their will to pass on their culture.”

So, how does Carlson think society can be improved? Surely, he wouldn’t suggest living under an oppressive regime that governs every thought, action and the value of human life. Yet, that is exactly what he agreed with.

“I travel a lot in the Middle East. It’s amazing. I’m not Muslim, obviously. I’m like, Christian... My ancestors are from you go to the Gulf, and it’s incredible to me to be in a place that has pride in itself that believes in its religion and culture that thinks, ‘we’re onto something...’ Those people are happy. They're welcoming of others, they're tolerant of diversity."

Having a specific religious value pushed upon you, or else you will be killed, doesn't mean that all the people there are happy or agree with what is being practiced. Forced religion doesn't make for freedom. It makes for converts in bondage.

Carlson believes that the people there's "self-confidence" makes for a welcoming attitude. He claims that the people are more tolerant of Christianity there, even where Sharia Law is the governing rule of the land, something he found amusing. He then takes a turn, giving his explanation as to why Muslim extremism exists.

"You notice in ISIS or Al-Qaeda like the Muslim extremists, they're all from like collapsed, pathetic societies dominated by colonial powers. They've been degraded, and that's why they're so angry," Carlson states.

Perhaps someone should fill Tucker Carlson in more on what Sharia Law and the Quran actually have to say.

As voices in media and culture raise provocative ideas about the future of the West, the Church must rise with clarity, conviction and unwavering allegiance to God's Word. We are blessed to live in a nation where there is freedom of religion, freedom to succeed (or fail) and where anyone has the opportunity to prosper. As we listen to media commentators, this is the time to be discerning about which voices to listen to and which to block from our viewpoint as we look forward and follow Jesus.

Buried for 2,000 Years: Ancient Holy Land Message Emerges With Chilling Warning

Archaeologists have discovered a stark message that was hidden for 2,000 years in the Holy Land.

According to the Daily Mail, archaeologists found a 2,000-year-old sling bullet bearing the message “Learn your lesson.”

The artifact was found in Israel in the old city of Hippos. It would have been used from a “handheld projectile pocket,” as the outlet noted, and it weighs 38 grams. It is believed to have been used by Greek defenders in the city.

Plenty of other lead sling bullets have been unearthed from this area, but this is the first to have been found with writing on it.

To order Dinesh D’Souza’s new book, The End of Time, visit .

Michael Eisenberg from the University of Haifa, said that “Sling bullets were a cheap munition, a hand-thrown projectile, used for is the first instance of the Greek word ‘learn’ attested on sling the local defender’s sense of sarcasm.”

The finding of this sling bullet in what is now the city of Sussita, close to the Sea of Galilee, was central to the ministry of Jesus.

In many ways, this discovery echoes one of the most iconic moments in Scripture—the clash between a shepherd boy and a giant on the battlefield.

The Daily Mail/Eisenberg/Palestine Exploration Quarterly

In 1 Samuel 17, David stepped forward with nothing more than a sling and a stone, while Goliath stood armored, imposing and seemingly unstoppable. Yet it was not the size of the weapon or the strength of the warrior that determined the outcome—it was the power of God working through what appeared small, simple and even insignificant.

This 2,000-year-old sling bullet serves as a striking reminder of that same truth. In the natural, it was just a small piece of lead—cheap, common and easily overlooked. But in the right hands, it became a decisive instrument. It is as if history itself is whispering a lesson—one that transcends ancient warfare and speaks into today’s spiritual battles. The weapons may change, the empires may rise and fall, but the pattern remains: God resists the proud and empowers the humble.

Is the Church Missing the Power of God? Why Miracles Are Drawing Thousands to Jesus Again

Is there a mystery behind the Temple Mount, the red heifer ceremony and a spiritual war happening around us right now?

In a new prophetic message, Jonathan Cahn explained how many influential voices today may be unknowingly echoing something deeper in their regard to Israel—dark transmissions from the spiritual realm. One of those voices he directly addressed included Tucker Carlson’s comments on Israel and the Temple Mount.

Referring to Carlson’s claims, Cahn said he suggested there was a “secret reason behind this war in Iran,” tying it to Israel and the Temple Mount. Cahn described Carlson’s argument as “basically doing what he does, which is innuendo... an allegation,” centered around the idea that Israel is attempting to remove the Dome of the Rock to rebuild the Temple.

“What Tucker Carlson is insinuating is that Israel... started the war to spark a holy war,” Cahn said.

He strongly rejected this narrative, calling it “all nonsense... conspiracy, lunacy, ultimately anti-Israel propaganda, anti-Semitic.”

Cahn emphasized that Israel already controls the Temple Mount and has intentionally avoided escalating conflict: “They chose... to give the mount into the hands or control of the Muslim authorities because they didn’t want there to be a holy war.”

Yet what struck him most was not just the claim itself—but its similarity to rhetoric from Hamas.

“Why is he all wrapped up in the Temple Mount?” Cahn asked. “Could he be getting it from another place?”

The Temple Mount at the Center of Global Conflict

A key focus of Cahn’s message is the Temple Mount, which he says sits at the center of both geopolitical tension and prophetic fulfillment.

Referencing the Oct. 7, 2023, Hamas attack, Cahn noted: “They admitted why they did it... they said it was all done because of the temple.”

He emphasized that Hamas even named the operation after the site—Al-Aqsa Flood—linking the violence directly to claims about Israel and the Temple Mount. Cahn also pointed out what he sees as a consistent theme: “They invaded Israel... because of the red cows.”

These red heifers, tied to biblical temple purification rituals, have suddenly returned to the scene in recent years.

A Pattern Beyond Politics

Cahn argues that these repeated narratives—from terrorist groups to media personalities—share a deeper, spiritual origin.

“What Tucker Carlson is saying, what Hamas is saying... makes no sense in the natural,” he said. “But in the supernatural—total.”

He went further, issuing a sobering warning: “When you hear people like Tucker Carlson... it’s not Tucker Carlson speaking... It’s the devil speaking.”

Cahn clarified he does not necessarily believe Carlson is aware of this, but suggested such messaging reflects deeper spiritual influence.

“It’s like you’re hearing... the devil’s thoughts, the devil’s words, the devil’s plans,” he said.

Why the Temple Matters in Prophecy

At the heart of Cahn’s message is a bold claim: the enemy is focused on the Temple Mount because of what it represents.

“It was prophesied in the Bible that the temple of God will actually be rebuilt,” he said. “And what will that lead to? The end times... the coming of Messiah.”

This explains the intense global fixation on Israel and Jerusalem.

“The enemy is threatened by it... because it represents the coming of the kingdom of God on earth.”

A Call to Discernment—and Hope

Cahn warns believers to use discernment in a time of spiritual confusion.

“Don’t let it into your mind... it’s the devil’s sickness,” he said. “And all things are coming against you... it’s a good sign,” Cahn said. “The intensity of the attack is telling you how great the purposes of God... ahead of you.”

This is the moment where we must look beyond headlines and recognize what may be happening in the unseen realm.

Amanda Grace: Is the Joe Kent Resignation Tied to a ‘Purim to Passover’ Prophetic Window?

What makes Crawford’s ministry stand out isn’t just his message. It’s how he delivers it.

Rather than preaching at crowds, Crawford focuses on personal, honest conversations with people from every background imaginable, speaking with those that society would see as unreachable and too far gone. However, he sees the truth that, as long as someone is alive, they are not far from God’s merciful hand.

“Transparency leads to transformation,” he said. “I’m broken. I’m a walking billboard of mistakes.”

His approach removes barriers that often keep people from engaging with Christianity.

“Hey, I’m not preaching at you. I’m learning with you right now,” he said.

Even his appearance plays a role in that accessibility.

“I just wear whatever I want... Crocs and [a] T-shirt, and shorts,” Crawford said, emphasizing authenticity over performance.

This style mirrors the relational ministry of Jesus—meeting people where they are, not where religion expects them to be.

Why Gentleness Is Opening More Doors Than Confrontation

Crawford also challenged traditional models of evangelism that rely on confrontation.

“There’s a lot of people who street preach out of sincerity, but I just have not seen a lot of fruit in that,” he said.

Instead, he prioritizes conversations rooted in biblical truth and compassion.

“We’re saying the same stuff... but we’re explaining it... with gentleness and respect,” Crawford said, referencing 1 Peter 3.

To order Abby Trivett’s new book, The Power of Suddenly, visit .

This shift is producing real impact.

“We need more one-on-one conversations that treat human beings as human beings, rather than... statistics,” he said.

In a culture skeptical of institutions and religious performance, that kind of intentionality is breaking through.

What He Learned From Sitting Down With Kenneth Copeland

One of Crawford's most surprising recent moments came during a sit-down interview with televangelist Kenneth Copeland.

While Crawford made it clear where he stands, he approached the conversation with humility.

"I do not believe in the prosperity gospel... but I'm going to be fair... I'm going to be gentle, and I want to talk about it," he said.

Rather than entering a combative stance, Crawford chose to listen.

"I'm trying to understand where you get this from," he explained.

The experience left a deeper impression than expected.

"Even though we disagreed, we had a great conversation," Crawford said, hinting that viewers may be surprised.

"There's something in that episode that I think people will be shocked to hear from him," he said.

A Generation Waiting for Spiritual Fathers

Crawford also believes the future of Gen Z revival depends not just on young voices—but on older generations stepping in.

"We need more fathers and mothers to step up," he said. "Pass the baton. Don't die with it."

And Gen Z isn't resistant—they're ready.

"Absolutely, they will [receive them]," Crawford said. "I think we're waiting."

In a world overflowing with noise, distraction and counterfeit connection, Gen Z isn't just searching—they're awakening. A generation that has tasted everything the world has to offer and found it empty is now turning toward something real, something eternal.

And perhaps the deeper question for the church is this: will we meet them there?

God or Mother Mary? Candace Owens' Controversial Speech on Faith and Charlie Kirk

According to Dayton, Ohio news outlet WDTN TV 2, former worship pastor and American Idol contestant Caleb Flynn appeared in court after being indicted on 11 charges. This includes four charges for the murder of his wife, Ashley.

During the arraignment, Flynn pleaded not guilty to all counts, setting the stage for what could become a lengthy and emotionally charged legal battle.

If convicted, prosecutors indicated that Flynn could face life in prison without the possibility of parole.

A Courtroom Marked by Grief

The weight of the tragedy was evident inside the courtroom, where family members of Ashley were present. Out of respect for their grief, the media were asked not to film the family during the hearing.

While many details remain under investigation, the case has already stirred deep concern due to the domestic nature of the allegations.

Bond Increased to $3.5 Million

One of the most significant developments during the hearing was the decision to increase Flynn's bond.

Originally set at a lower amount, the judge raised it to $3.5 million during the arraignment, citing the seriousness of the charges and the court's concern about the case.

To order Don Dickerman's book, Death Row Redemption, visit .

Flynn's defense attorney declined to elaborate on the bond increase, stating only that he "looks forward to defending Flynn" as the legal process unfolds.

Strict No-Contact Order Issued

In addition to the bond increase, the court issued a strict no-contact order, particularly concerning the couple's two children.

As explained during the hearing, the order prohibits Flynn from having any form of contact, including:

- In-person communication
- Third-party contact
- Communication through legal intermediaries

The only exceptions would be those specifically permitted under legal guidelines involving minor children.

A Call for Justice—and Reflection

Cases like this serve as sobering reminders of how quickly violence can devastate a family. This also calls for us to take a deeper look at the sanctity of life, the importance of justice and the need for healing in the aftermath of tragedy.

Right now, pray for Ashley Flynn's family as they deal with this heartbreaking scenario, especially for the Flynn children.
