

Pope Leo Ousts California Bishop Accused of Embezzling $250,000 Amid Brothel Allegations

A shocking scandal involving a bishop in California is sending waves through the Catholic community and raising renewed concerns about integrity in spiritual leadership.

According to Reuters, Pope Leo has accepted the resignation of Bishop Emanuel Hana Shaleta, the leader of the Chaldean Catholic Eparchy of St. Peter the Apostle in San Diego, after he was arrested and accused of stealing approximately $250,000 from his church. The move comes as Shaleta faces a growing list of criminal charges tied to alleged financial misconduct.

Shaleta had served the San Diego-based Chaldean Catholic community since 2017, shepherding a significant population of believers. Reuters reported that the region is home to roughly 71,000 Chaldean Catholics.

The allegations surfaced after a church employee reportedly noticed discrepancies in financial records and alerted authorities. As Reuters noted, the alleged misconduct occurred in 2024, eventually leading prosecutors to file 16 felony charges, including embezzlement and money laundering. Shaleta has pleaded not guilty to the charges.

The situation escalated when Shaleta was arrested on March 5 at San Diego International Airport while preparing to board an international flight.

According to Fox News, prosecutors believe rent payments connected to a church social hall may have played a key role in the alleged fraud. Authorities say the rent was paid to Shaleta in cash, and he reportedly reimbursed the church using funds from another account intended to help individuals struggling to pay their rent.

Fox News reported that the monthly payments were more than $30,000, and investigators believe roughly $272,000 in church funds are unaccounted for.

The Fox News report also noted that these charges come as Shaleta has been described as having a "secret double life," including claims that Shaleta had traveled to areas associated with the red-light district in Tijuana, Mexico.

In recent years, the church has witnessed multiple high-profile failures among leaders across denominations. These moments can shake the faith of many, but they also highlight the urgent need for prayer, accountability and spiritual discernment within the body of Christ.

Scripture reminds believers in 1 Corinthians 10:12, "Therefore let him who thinks he stands take heed, lest he fall."

As more cases involving ministers and church leaders continue to surface, believers are called to pray for truth to come to light, for justice where wrongdoing has occurred and for restoration where repentance is possible. Just as importantly, the church must seek the Lord for discernment and integrity in leadership, asking God to raise up shepherds who will faithfully guard His people and steward His church with righteousness.

Rihanna Targeted in Shooting as Suspect Rants About Witchcraft in Chilling Videos

A Florida woman is behind bars after allegedly driving across the country and firing multiple rounds at the home of global music superstar Rihanna, in a frightening incident that authorities say could have ended in tragedy.

According to a televised report from FOX 11 Los Angeles, police say 35-year-old Yvonne Ortiz traveled from Orlando, Florida, to Los Angeles with the intention of targeting someone inside the Beverly Crest residence shared by Rihanna and her partner, rapper A$AP Rocky.

Investigators say the situation unfolded Sunday afternoon when Ortiz allegedly opened fire on the home while sitting inside her vehicle. Authorities believe she fired between five and ten rounds from a semiautomatic rifle before fleeing the scene.

Thankfully, no one inside the residence was injured.

Police later arrested Ortiz a short time after the shooting. Authorities say an assault-style rifle was discovered inside her Tesla when she was taken into custody.

During a briefing with reporters, LAPD Police Chief Jim

McDonnell said the severity of the case and the number of people potentially placed in danger contributed to the high bail set for the suspect.

Ortiz's bail has been set at $10,225,000.

"The bail is as high as it is because of the number of victims," McDonnell explained. "There were a total of 10 people present when that shooting occurred, and all would be considered victims."

Authorities are now reviewing her social media activity as part of the investigation.

According to the FOX 11 report, detectives say Ortiz's online posts reveal what they describe as an escalating fixation on Rihanna. The posts reportedly include a mix of celebrity references and religious content, including Bible passages and daily prayer journal entries, shared in videos posted online.

In one video, Ortiz was found saying, "Listen, Rihanna, when you die, God is taking me to my future."

Additional details about Ortiz's online activity have also raised concerns about the nature of her claims against the singer.

According to a report from The Blaze, the suspect posted several videos in which she accused Rihanna of practicing witchcraft. In footage from her YouTube series titled "Praying Woman's Journal," Ortiz reportedly alleged that the artist used her music as a means to carry out witchcraft and even referred to Rihanna as "a witch."

The Blaze noted that Ortiz appeared paranoid about Rihanna wanting to harm her, stating in a post online, “Are you there? ... Say something to me directly instead of sneaking around like you talking to me where I’m not at.” She also said in another that Rihanna did “her little music thing so she can do witchcraft.”

The disturbing details surrounding this case also serve as a sobering reminder of how easily Scripture can be twisted when it is removed from its true context and authority. Throughout history, people have attempted to use the Bible to justify personal obsessions, delusions or even harmful actions—something Scripture itself warns against.

The tragedy of this situation highlights the danger of spiritual confusion and the importance of rightly understanding God’s Word. As believers are reminded in 2 Timothy 2:15, we are called to “rightly divide the word of truth,” ensuring that Scripture is handled with humility, wisdom and a genuine pursuit of Christ rather than being manipulated to fuel fear, anger or unhealthy spiritual obsession.

Return of the Gods: Jonathan

Cahn Warns the Spirit of Baal Is Rising Again

Years before he ever entered the political arena, President Donald Trump spoke candidly in a television interview about whether he would ever run for office—and whether America would elect someone who refused to play political games.

In the wide-ranging 1995 conversation with Roger Ailes, Trump was asked directly whether he would consider entering politics. His response revealed both skepticism about the political system and a belief that Americans wanted stronger leadership.

“I’m a pretty straight guy and I’m not sure that somebody that really calls it like it is and says this is what you have to do,” Trump said. “I’m not sure that kind of a guy gets elected. Maybe so, maybe not.”

At the time, Trump was known primarily as a real estate developer and businessman, but political questions were already following him. In the interview, he acknowledged that many people had already encouraged him to run.

“Everybody wants me to do it,” Trump said. “They all want me to run, run.”

Yet he expressed concern about the nature of modern politics, suggesting that honesty and bluntness were not always welcomed in Washington.

“There’s a certain dishonesty unfortunately that you need for running for office,” he said.

Despite that critique, Trump made it clear he believed America needed stronger leadership when dealing with foreign nations and economic policy. He pointed specifically to trade negotiations, arguing that the United States too often surrendered its leverage.

“I would take a much harder stand,” Trump said when discussing how he would approach international negotiations. “I would say make a couple of enemies. I think I’d make a lot of friends ultimately.”

Trump argued that a firmer approach would earn respect for the United States around the world.

“I think we’d be better off, and I think we’d be far more respected,” he said.

Throughout the interview, Trump repeatedly emphasized the importance of strength in leadership and negotiation. He criticized what he believed was a pattern of American leaders backing down during trade disputes, calling it “the most incredible failure in negotiation that I’ve seen.”

At the time, the idea of Trump as a political candidate seemed unlikely to many observers. Yet looking back, the comments offer a fascinating glimpse into how his political thinking was already forming decades before he would launch a campaign.

Looking back now, the moment feels striking. Long before campaign rallies, election nights and a presidency that would reshape American politics, Trump spoke candidly about leadership, truth and the cost of standing firm. At the time, it sounded like speculation. Today, it reads more like foreshadowing.

What once seemed like a passing comment in a 1990s interview now stands as a reminder that history—and perhaps even destiny—sometimes begins to reveal itself long before the world is ready to recognize it.

Iran Launches ‘Heaviest Operation’ Yet as Israel Strikes Tehran

Tensions across the Middle East are rapidly escalating as new attacks at sea, drone incidents and widening military strikes continue to unfold across the region.

One of the most significant flashpoints emerged in the Strait of Hormuz, a narrow waterway that serves as a vital artery for global oil and commercial shipping.

According to CNN, the United Kingdom’s maritime agency reported that three vessels were struck by what were described as “unknown projectiles” near the strategic passage. The strikes damaged the ships and left multiple sailors missing.

According to the New York Post, the U.S. military said it had eliminated 16 Iranian mine-laying vessels in the area after President Donald Trump warned Iran not to place any mines in the crucial shipping lane.

Sources also told CNN that Tehran had begun laying mines in the waterway before the U.S. operation took place.

Beyond the maritime conflict, Iran appears to be expanding its military campaign across the region. Iranian state media claimed the country launched its “most intense and heaviest operation” since the start of the war, CNN reported. Missile interceptions were reported across several Gulf states as well as Israel as the attacks unfolded.

The outlet also noted that Russia is now advising Iran on drone warfare tactics, adding another geopolitical layer to the growing crisis.

Israel has responded with additional military operations targeting Iranian positions. CNN reported that Israel announced it had launched an “additional wave” of strikes on targets in Tehran.

For many Christians watching events unfold in the Middle East, the growing turmoil carries deeper spiritual significance. Scripture repeatedly points to the region as central to the unfolding of end-times events. Jesus Himself warned in Matthew 24 that the last days would be marked by “wars and rumors of wars,” urging believers not to be troubled but to remain watchful.

The prophet Ezekiel also foretold a future alignment of nations surrounding Israel, describing in Ezekiel 38 a coalition of powers rising in the region in the latter days. As tensions increase across Iran, Israel and neighboring nations, many believers see reminders of the biblical reality that history is ultimately moving toward God’s prophetic purposes.

As events continue to unfold across the Middle East, the words of Scripture serve as both a warning and a hope—that even amid conflict and instability, God remains sovereign over the nations and His plan for the world will ultimately prevail.

Gunman Shot After Taking Two Women Hostage Near Baltimore Synagogue

A tense hostage standoff and shooting near a Baltimore synagogue on Tuesday ended with the suspect dead and several people injured, prompting both concern and relief within the local Jewish community.

According to the New York Post, police responded to a call about a burglary at a home on Park Heights Avenue in northwest Baltimore, an area located near the Agudath Israel of Baltimore. When officers arrived, the situation quickly escalated after the suspect allegedly opened fire from inside the residence.

As the Post notes, the confrontation soon turned into a hostage situation involving two women inside the home. One of the women managed to escape by jumping out of a window. The suspect reportedly held a firearm to other hostage's head during the standoff.

Police and emergency units responded to the scene, during which at least one Baltimore police officer was shot in the leg, and was taken to the hospital. He is expected to recover, according to reporting from the New York Post.

This incident occurred in close proximity to the synagogue, raising early concerns about whether the Jewish community might have been the intended target. The Jerusalem Post and The Times of Israel stated that officials do not currently believe the synagogue itself was targeted.

Still, the proximity of the shooting to the synagogue understandably caused alarm among residents and members of the Jewish community, as the Times of Israel noted.

Incidents like this serve as a sobering reminder of the need for prayer and spiritual vigilance. During this time, pray for all those affected by the incident: for the injured officer recovering from his wounds, for the civilians who experienced the trauma of the hostage situation and for the Jewish community in Baltimore who were understandably shaken by the violence occurring so close to their place of worship.
