

Amanda Grace: Olympics, Super Bowl and the Growing Satanic Agenda

As scandals and controversies continue to surface across portions of the charismatic church, a growing conversation is emerging: What is God doing in this moment?

In a recent message, Isaiah Saldivar addressed this issue head-on, arguing that what many are calling a crisis may actually be a divine refining process.

“All right, I want to talk about all the exposure happening right now, specifically in the charismatic church,” Saldivar said. “What we’re seeing with scandals, fake prophetic words ... leaders are being exposed.”

While acknowledging the seriousness of recent revelations, Saldivar cautioned believers against swinging to unhealthy extremes. “There’s two real extremes people are responding with to this whole exposure,” he explained. One side, he said, uses scandals to discredit the entire movement. The other refuses to acknowledge problems at all. “I would say both responses are not biblical.”

Instead, Saldivar framed the current season as part of God’s work in purifying His people. “Exposure is not God saying I’m abandoning my church,” he said. “Exposure is God purifying His people.” He added emphatically, “Exposure is not Satan winning. Exposure is not revival dying. Exposure is God refusing to allow sin, division, chaos, compromise to stay hidden in the church.”

Saldivar made clear he was not advocating for what he called “heresy hunter” culture, where ministries are attacked over theological disagreements. Rather, he said legitimate exposure involving sin, abuse or deception is necessary. “When there is sin, when there’s compromise, when there’s corruption, when there is scandals, when there’s abuse of power ... that needs to be exposed. Amen for exposure.”

Central to his message was a warning about confusing spiritual gifting with spiritual maturity. “We have to remember that anointing is not the same as approval,” Saldivar said. “The gifting does not prove maturity. Fruit is proof of maturity.” He also challenged the idea that platform size equals spiritual authority. “Just because someone has crowds or influence doesn’t mean they have intimacy with God.”

The message also addressed accountability in church leadership. “The Bible never teaches that prophecy is beyond correction,” he said. “The Bible never says that prophets are untouchable.” He stressed that correction should be seen as part of spiritual health, noting, “Correction is not rejection.”

Despite the sobering nature of recent exposures, Saldivar urged believers not to abandon the work of the Holy Spirit. “The answer to abuse is not unbelief,” he said. “The answer to deception is not to shut down and don’t have church anymore.” Instead, he called for “biblical balance,” combining strong scriptural foundations with openness to the Spirit’s work.

Ultimately, Saldivar expressed hope for the future. “This is not the end of the charismatic church,” he said. “This is the refining moment of the charismatic church.” He encouraged believers to pursue humility, repentance and strong character, adding, “We got to value character over charisma.”

Closing with a personal reflection, Saldivar shared his own goal for ministry longevity. “I don’t want to be known as a great preacher, great speaker, great communicator,” he said. “I want to be known as a man of God. I want to be known as a man of prayer.”

In a time when many believers are wrestling with difficult questions, Saldivar’s message offers a sobering but hopeful perspective: purification, not destruction, may be at work.

TPUSA Halftime Show Pays Emotional Tribute to Charlie Kirk’s Voice for Faith and America

Last night’s All-American Halftime Show presented by Turning Point USA honored its late co-founder in an emotional tribute.

In the minute-long clip highlighting Charlie Kirk’s life, especially his accomplishments through Turning Point USA and his family, a previous message from Kirk about what matters most in life was played.

“I want to honor God in all that I do. I wanna be a great husband, a great father. I want to serve this country. I want to try to continue to lead this movement, and to speak truth, and to never lie,” Kirk said.

He continued, speaking on the importance of being selfless and focused on bringing strength and freedom to the nation.

“To stop thinking about yourself all the time, and instead, think about what you should do to help other people and to defend this country above yourself. I’m so inspired. This army of freedom fighters, we’re gonna be around for the next hundred, two hundred years, because we know in the end, our ideas will win,” the video continued.

The footage also highlighted Kirk’s heart for God and family.

During a powerful interview on the Girls Gone Bible podcast, author John Bevere delivered a direct and sobering message to modern believers: The church must move beyond inspiration and return to a deep commitment to God’s Word, repentance and holy living—especially as believers live closer to Christ’s return.

According to Bevere, Scripture repeatedly connects eagerly anticipating Christ’s return with spiritual transformation.

“The anticipation of His second coming gives us the power to purify ourselves,” he said.

The Warning About Lukewarm Christianity

Bevere warned that one of the greatest dangers in today’s church is lukewarm faith, which is something he says many believers misunderstand.

“A lukewarm person has enough Christianity to blend in with the believers and has enough of the world to blend in with the world,” he said. “They can blend in easily.”

He emphasized that this spiritual condition is especially dangerous because many who live this way still believe they are spiritually secure.

“The person who knows they’re not right with God is easy to reach,” Bevere said. “The person who thinks they’re right with God—you have to show them why they’re not right with God in order to get them to get right with God.”

Inspiration vs. Transformation

Bevere also challenged the modern church’s focus on inspiration over biblical truth. He notes that when churches prioritize feeling good over teaching Scripture, believers become spiritually weak and vulnerable to deception.

“I think what’s going to get us in big trouble in America is not what we preach—it’s what we’re not preaching,” Bevere said.

Repentance and True Devotion

Using an analogy of engagement, Bevere explained repentance as total devotion to Jesus. It is the total abandonment of the sinful things that have kept us separated from Him.

“Repentance [is] coming to Jesus saying, ‘You gave your life for me. You’re my creator. I am never going to date, flirt with, or give my phone number out or sleep with that which drove the nails through your hands again,’” he said.

Living With Eternity in Mind

Ultimately, Bevere says Christians must live with urgency while remaining faithful in everyday life.

“We should live like He’s coming today... but we should plan our lives like He’s not coming for 400 years,” he said. “Because He said, ‘Occupy until I come.’”

Now is the time that we have been given to get right with God before His Second Coming. The real question: Are you ready for His return?

Jenny Weaver Warns of Growing Spiritual Corruption Targeting the Church

With February in full swing, Amanda Grace issued a prophetic warning: a “ferocious February,” marked by exposure, national upheaval and an urgent call for the church to stay spiritually alert.

In a recent livestream, Grace pointed first to President

Donald Trump's announcement of a national prayer gathering in May to "rededicate America as one nation under God." Calling it "super important," Grace framed the moment as more than political messaging, insisting it carries the weight of spiritual confrontation. "The enemy does not want this nation rededicated," she warned. "He does not want us to have an Ezra moment in this nation and come together as a nation and rededicate it to God."

Drawing from Scripture, Grace compared this season to the rebuilding and recommitment seen in the days of Nehemiah and Ezra, describing a time when restoration was followed by public return to the covenant.

"This is an Ezra moment we are approaching in this nation," Grace said, adding that opposition is intensifying precisely because of what this represents: "The enemy is livid about it... and this is why you have watched these things kick into overdrive."

From there, the commentary moved into what Grace described as a parallel surge of exposure—particularly inside national institutions. Referring to a report alleging concerning affiliations involving Rep. Rashida Tlaib, Grace said, "Isn't it interesting that in the year approaching America's 250th anniversary we are watching two things collide and converge... one of the greatest seasons of exposure and excavation we have ever seen in this nation—and we are also watching the president announce intentions to rededicate the nation to Almighty God."

She then read aloud excerpts from prophetic words she had been given on Oct. 20, 2023, and Dec. 6, 2023, describing coming scandal, upheaval, and exposure in Congress and the Senate. "The squad indeed shall be scattered as chaff before the wind,” Grace quoted, later adding, “Truth as a sword is what shall gut the full belly of lies of the nation.”

However, the livestream repeatedly came back to one looming prophetic marker: Purim.

Citing a Dec. 20, 2025 word—“a January of justice... shall lead to a ferocious February setting up for a roar... in March”—Grace argued the timing is critical because the nation is “within that 30-day window to Purim.” Grace emphasized Purim’s biblical setting in Persia (modern-day Iran) and warned that rising conflict with Iran and shifting diplomatic negotiations are not random. “We are now approximately 29 days from Purim... The book of Esther, involving Purim, took place in Iran,” she said.

Grace also believes the timing near Purim may connect to the kidnapping case involving Savannah Guthrie’s mom. “Please pray for this family,” she said, calling for agreement in prayer, “to break through a spiritual embargo.” With Purim’s themes of reversal, decrees and deliverance in view, Amanda Grace urged believers not to disengage: “We have to be sober-minded and vigilant... we as the church cannot put rose colored glasses on right now.”

However, even in the midst of fear and national shaking, Amanda Grace pointed to one fantastic exhortation and promise from 1 Samuel 30: strengthen yourself in the Lord, inquire of Him and pursue—because in this season, God still causes His people to “recover all.”
