

Taylor Swift Brings Haunting Lyrics Into Reality in New 'Opalite' Video

Taylor Swift continues to make waves with her dark and disturbing music.

One of the biggest pop stars in the world, Swift has been dangerously enchanting people for years, unfortunately, pulling many into her songs that are explicit, mock God, and are filled with anger and bitterness. With her latest album, "Life of a Showgirl," Swift has released what is likely her darkest album yet.

Now, the release of her music video for "Opalite" has finally made its way to the mainstream.

The video, released on Apple Music and Spotify, highlights Swift's strange "best friend," a pet rock, and her making paper fortune tellers. The video also highlights other celebrities whom Swift mentioned in a TikTok post about "Opalite." Graham Norton, Lewis Capaldi, Jodie Turner Smith, Domhnall Gleeson, Cillian Murphy and Greta Lee are all highlighted in the video.

However, even underneath the "friends" element of the video, there is more to it.

The lyrics to "Opalite" speak of pining over ex-lovers, calling it "eating out of the trash." Scripture even tells us that a dog returns to its vomit, and it appears Swift is admitting that.

She then sings: "I thought my house was haunted. I used to live with ghosts."

This right here speaks directly to the supernatural and to the demonic realm. Something we should never entertain.

Even when a video or song is wrapped in a playful, nostalgic or lighthearted aesthetic, believers are called to exercise discernment. Not everything that appears harmless truly is. Scripture reminds us that the enemy does not always present himself in obvious darkness – sometimes deception comes packaged in beauty, creativity and emotional connection.

What we listen to, what we repeat and what we allow to shape our thoughts matters deeply.

Music has power. And spiritual compromise rarely announces itself loudly; often it whispers. The Bible warns that even demons disguise themselves as angels of light, and that is why spiritual vigilance is not optional for those who want to walk in truth.

At the same time, our response should be to pray for Taylor Swift. No one is beyond His reach, and no platform is too big for His transforming power. Pray that she would encounter the true light of Jesus Christ, that truth would replace confusion and that her gifts and influence would ultimately be surrendered to God's purpose.

Kim Clement's 2010 Vision: The Betrayal Prophecy and the Battle Over the White House

There is a prophetic firestorm happening right in front of our eyes.

During a recent broadcast, Joseph Z and Perry Stone explored the growing tension across the Middle East, framing current events as part of a larger spiritual and geopolitical shift that is capturing the attention of many believers worldwide.

In this conversation, Stone immediately pointed to Iran. "I'm very stirred and very interested in what is happening in Iran," he said, explaining, "Iran is the modern name. The biblical name would be Persia, but it would also be Elam."

Stone then shared what he said came from leaders he'd met from the underground church. "They said that the underground church was...literally exploding in the country of Iran," he recounted, noting believers must meet quietly because "they would be arrested...if they were caught."

He described the sobering warnings given to new believers, especially women: "When young women of any age come to know Christ... the first thing we warn them is, 'You do know that you could be killed for your faith if you're caught.'" Yet he said many respond with unwavering resolve: "We understand that," and believe "the torture that we have to go through for a season is worth eternity with the Lord."

From there, Stone pivoted to Gaza, calling it "a complete disaster zone,” and pointing to proposed rebuilding efforts. “One of the things they’re talking about is turning Gaza into this paradise,” he said, describing ideas like “building these huge skyscrapers along the coast.” But he emphasized the obstacle: “You’re not going to have any kind of building or peace with Hamas from the military branch in the way of thinking they have.”

To frame Gaza prophetically, Stone read from Isaiah, noting the passage’s language about “Palestina.” “The Palestinians call themselves Palestinian,” he said, “and they call the land that they want...they call it Palestine.” He quoted Isaiah 14: “Rejoice not thou whole Palestina...For out of the serpent’s root shall come forth a cockatrice... and his fruit shall be a fiery flying serpent.” Stone then connected that imagery to Revelation, arguing, “That word dragon is actually a Greek word for serpent...It literally should be translated [as] a great red serpent.”

As global tensions continue to tighten and alliances shift in ways few predicted even a decade ago, the bigger question may not be simply what is happening, but why it is happening now. The world is entering a season in which decisions made in the shadows could shape generations to come, and the church must decide whether to watch from the sidelines or discern the times and respond with clarity, conviction, and faith.

Tongva Tribe Eyes Legal Options as Billie Eilish Backlash Grows Over ‘Stolen Land’ Remark

Sometimes life is a bit ironic.

At the Grammys, superstar Billie Eilish did exactly what you would expect a pop star to do. She completely contradicted herself. Playing off of the growing anti-ICE movement, Eilish stated, “Nobody is illegal on stolen land.”

While she may have gotten applause right then and there, Eilish has faced major backlash ever since for what turns out to be a contradiction to her own life.

As the New York Post noted, Eilish’s multimillion dollar home sits the ancestral land of the Tongva Tribe in Los Angeles. Since then, the tribe addressed the situation.

“Eilish has not contacted our tribe directly regarding her property,” a tribal spokesperson said per the New York Post. “We do value the instance when public figures provide visibility to the true history of this country. It is our hope that in future discussions, the tribe can explicitly be referenced to ensure the public understands that the greater Los Angeles Basin remains Gabrieleno Tongva territory.”

Since this scenario, Sinai Lawn Firm stated that they would help out the tribe pro bono to get Eilish off of the land.

“Sinai Law Firm is offering to evict Billie Eilish from her Los Angeles home on a pro bono basis on behalf of the Tongva Tribe,” the firm announced.

While this statement was done more as a joke than to really evict Eilish from her house, the point was made. You must speak the truth. You must mean what you say and not be hypocritical about it.

Scripture makes it clear that “life and death are in the power of the tongue.” What we speak doesn’t just reflect what we believe—it helps shape the atmosphere around us, the direction of our lives and even the legacy we leave behind. Culture may reward catchy slogans or emotional reactions, but God calls His people to something higher: truth spoken in love, integrity lived out in action and words that align with His heart.

Tim Allen Celebrates Major Bible Reading Milestone

Actor Tim Allen is sharing an incredible marker in his faith journey.

In a post on X, Allen let fans know that he has finally completed reading the Bible after 13 months of study.

Finished the entire Bible. It's been a 13 month word by word page by page no skimming journey. Humbled, enlightened and amazed at what I read and what I learned. I will rest and meditate on so much. I will begin it again.

Allen has been very open about his faith journey, diving into Scripture and even speaking with Bill Maher about his understanding of the apostle Paul and his insights into Christianity.

“Without law, you don't know what sinful is,” Allen told Maher, explaining the purpose of the Law and how it applies to life today.

Previously, Allen gave updates about His dive into both the

New and Old Testaments.

“Finished the Old Testament and it is such a gift when I get out of the way and the words and meaning flow,” Allen previously stated.

Allen spent nearly a year studying the Old Testament, which he said was a humbling venture, calling it “a treasure.”

Allen’s journey is a powerful reminder that God’s Word is not just meant to be read—it is meant to transform. In a world filled with noise, distraction and spiritual confusion, choosing to slow down and walk through Scripture is a testimony of hunger for truth.

Donald Trump Declares ‘Prayer Is America’s Superpower’ at National Prayer Breakfast

President Donald Trump decided to speak on the power of prayer during the 2026 National Prayer Breakfast.

The 74th Annual Prayer Breakfast, which was held at the U.S. Capitol, included remarks from Faith Office Leader Paula White-Cain, Secretary of War Pete Hegseth and Speaker of the House Mike Johnson. During his keynote remarks, the president addressed the power of prayer and the future of faith in the nation.

“Almost 250 years after our Founding Fathers took one of the greatest leaps of faith in human history, the reminds us that prayers strengthen, prayers heal, prayer empowers and prayer saves,” Trump said. “Quite simply, prayer is America’s superpower. It really is a superpower. And it always has been and it always will be.”

He also discussed an upcoming rededication ceremony for America to God, which will take place on May 17.

“I’m pleased to announce that on May 17, 2026, that we’re inviting Americans from all across the country to come together on our National Mall to pray, to give ‘re going to rededicate America as one nation under ‘ve always said you just can’t have a great country if you don’t have religion. You have to believe in something. You have to believe that what we’re doing there’s a reason for it. There has to be a reason for it.”

The president further reflected on his first term, border security, and faith protections in schools.

“Today, I’m also pleased to announce that the Department of Education is officially issuing its new guidance to protect the right to prayer in our public schools,” the president stated.

He then brought up his controversial comments about not making it into heaven during the breakfast.

“I was being can’t be sarcastic with [the media] because they write your was just having fun. I really think I probably should make it. I mean, I’m not a perfect candidate, but I did a lot of good for perfect people.”

In a time of great spiritual hunger, the call to pray is more than a tradition—it is an invitation to national renewal, moral clarity, and a return to the foundation that has carried America through its most difficult and historic moments.

Savannah Guthrie Speaks Out As Family Faces Nightmare of Mother’s Disappearance

Recently, a global address on European independence caught Benny Hinn’s attention. He believes this discussion about geopolitical shifts could carry deeper spiritual significance.

During remarks reflecting on global transformation, European leadership highlighted the need for structural change, stating that today’s geopolitical climate represents “a seismic change” and “an opportunity, in fact a necessity to build a new form of European independence.”

For Hinn, this language about the reshaping of global alliances could be akin to biblical prophecy—particularly passages in the book of Daniel that describe end-time kingdoms and global power structures.

“I did not expect to see so much prophecy happening so quickly this year. We are in truly, truly amazing times,” Hinn said.

He pointed specifically to the broader prophetic framework many Christians have studied for decades, noting, “The prophecy would be sealed until the last days. And now God is opening the seal of the prophecy he gave to Daniel about the last kingdom on earth before the coming of the Lord.”

To order James Lasher’s new book, The Revelation of Jesus, visit .

While acknowledging uncertainty about exact prophetic fulfillment, he added, “We again don’t know exactly what’s going to happen... We see through a glass darkly till God begins to clear it all up.”

The discussion also turned toward long-standing debates about the identity of prophetic global alliances. Some have historically linked end-times power structures to Europe or global institutions, though interpretations vary widely among theologians.

“This could very well be... the formation of the last kingdom on earth,” Hinn said. “And maybe the UN is a part of it. We just don’t know.”

Hinn then focused on spiritual readiness. Drawing from 1 Thessalonians 4, he emphasized our hope to be found in Christ’s return.

“The great catching up of the church is a reality,” he said, referencing the passage describing believers being “caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord... and so shall we ever be with the Lord.”

He stressed that biblical prophecy is meant to encourage believers, not create fear.

“Comfort one another with these words,” he quoted, adding, “The coming of the Lord is so certain.”

Hinn further called for spiritual vigilance, referencing Jesus’ warning in Luke 21. “Take heed to yourselves... Don’t let the cares of this life take your attention away,” he said, noting that Scripture warns end-times events will come “as a snare... on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth.”

Another key theme was the importance of daily engagement with Scripture. Referencing research on Bible reading habits, he said, “If you read your Bible four times a week, it will change everything about your life... I read my Bible seven days a week.”

As global tensions, alliances and economic systems continue to shift, we have no choice but to stay grounded in faith.

“This is not the time to give up,” Hinn said. “This is the time to be steadfast, strong in the Lord, strong in the power of His blessed word.”
