

Calvary Chapel Fires Back at Candace Owens' Shocking Accusations

After months of silence, uncertainty and intense prayer, Mikhaila Peterson shared a new update regarding her father, Jordan Peterson's, ongoing health battle.

"I don't have a lot to say because everything's been slow," she explained, opening her update with raw honesty about her father's condition. "He's still very unwell, but he's not in the hospital. I'm seeing him every day for hours, which is really nice."

Even with specialists diligently working to uncover the root of his illness, Mikhaila points out that answers are still elusive. The family continues to navigate a maze of possibilities—neurological, autoimmune or a combination of both—while clinging to hope and covering the situation in prayer.

"We're giving him more time to recover," she said. "I'm hopeful he will recover with time. When I posted the last video, I didn't know if he would recover at all. It was really scary and I'm hopeful now, but it's still early on."

Though the road ahead remains uncertain, she acknowledged a subtle shift: "Things are really bad, but they're not as bad as they were a month ago or two months ago."

A Year Marked by Trial After Trial

This unfolding family crisis follows what Mikhaila described as a relentless year of hardship—one that has kept her almost entirely offline.

“I haven’t really been online... because the situation is stressful and sad, and I don’t really want to get on a camera and pretend everything’s okay,” she said.

Her absence wasn’t from lack of desire to connect, but from an avalanche of personal trials: a difficult pregnancy, followed by her infant daughter, Audrey, suffering a sudden and unexplained medical emergency.

“Then Audrey, my seven-month-old now, getting incredibly sick. Then dad getting sick,” she recounted. Audrey’s condition escalated to the point of near-fatal danger. “She almost died from a heart issue even though her heart is normal. She was diagnosed with idiopathic pulmonary hypertension... that seems to have been a one-off freak incident.”

Gratitude for Prayer—and a Call for Continued Intercession

Mikhaila ended her update with heartfelt gratitude to those who have been standing with the family.

“I can’t thank you enough for the outpour[ing] of prayers and messages after the last video. They have been so helpful to me. I don’t even have words for how helpful they’ve been,” she said. “They’ve helped my mom, too.”

During this time, continue to pray for complete restoration for Jordan Peterson and his family as they walk through this challenging season of life.

Demonic Takeover: The Surging Movement Pulling Christians Into Paganism

There is no doubt about it. The Great Falling Away is finally here.

In a report by The Times, something dark and sinister was discovered: Christians are leaving the faith for explicit paganism. They are not merely leaving because they want to live by their own rules. This falling away is explicitly to go and embrace “paganism, wicca or another form of ‘spiritualism,’” with one in 10 ditching Christianity.

Unfortunately for Great Britain, even with more people converting to Christianity, “these arrivals are outnumbered by people quitting the faith,” as The Times noted.

As the Institute for the Impact of Faith in Life (IIFL) noted, 83% of those who left Christianity now consider themselves to be either agnostic or atheist. 11% of those who abandoned Christianity now call themselves “spiritual,” with 47% of these fitting into the category as pagan and 7% as Wiccan.

This detrimental shift in society shows that we are literally in a spiritual war. Good and evil are real, and Satan will stop at nothing to take people down into the depths of hell with him. He only comes to steal, kill and destroy, and in this case, deceive people into darkness, giving a false sense of freedom.

We must remember that any promises Satan offers are empty and fleeting. He cannot give life beyond this world, he cannot provide genuine love, and he cannot grant the eternal peace our souls are created to receive. What he offers is temporary, hollow and leads only to despair. Jesus Christ, on the other hand, is the source of true life, love and lasting peace. He walks with us through every trial and tribulation, and His promises are eternal, never failing. Those who turn to Him find a love and fulfillment that no earthly or demonic offering can match.

In the midst of this Great Falling Away, believers can stand firm, knowing that only Jesus can satisfy the deepest longings of the human heart, giving life that lasts forever and a hope that darkness can never steal.

Scientists Stunned: Hidden Megastructures Beneath the Giza Pyramids Now 'Confirmed'

We are stepping into a new era with the Giza pyramids.

A Daily Mail report noted that scientists have officially "confirmed" the presence of megastructures beneath the pyramids. After a group of Italian researchers found a "colossal underground complex" on the Giza Plateau, the radar engineer on the project is now addressing the team's specific findings.

Filippo Biondi spoke on the American Alchemy podcast, where he explained that "four independent satellite operators" returned "identical raw tomography data" that depicted exactly the same structural images.

"All four satellites gave exactly the same results," he noted. "We cannot announce anything without these basic scientific methods."

The scans reportedly showed eight cylinders that extended directly from the base of the Khafre pyramid. As Biondi stated, what we see on the surface level with the pyramids is the "tip of the iceberg." Instead, he believes what really matters is underneath the pyramids.

Though some may argue that the cylinders underneath are natural, Biondi is very firm in his belief that "It's man-made. You do not find perfect coils like this in geology."

The Daily Mail noted that the Italian research team also found a cylinder beneath the Menkaure pyramid and another shaft beneath the Sphinx.

While some may criticize these findings, the Italian scientists are sticking to their research and suggest that an actual exploration could take place in 2026.

Tony Evans Officially Passes Pastoral Leadership to Son

As December's festivities approach, many wonder: Should we celebrate Christmas or focus on Hanukkah?

In a recent video, prophetic voice Perry Stone offered a compelling look at both, showing that whether Jewish or Christian, both celebrations point to spiritual truths—most importantly, Jesus as the Light of the World.

As Stone notes, Hanukkah's story begins in 168 BC, during a turbulent time in Jewish history.

Antiochus IV Epiphanes desecrated the Jewish Temple, built an altar to his god Zeus, and even "offered a pig on the altar...which completely desecrated and defiled the Jewish temple.” Jews were no longer allowed to celebrate the Sabbath, circumcise their sons or observe the Torah’s feasts.

In response, a Jewish high priest and his five sons led a revolt. After three years, Judah Maccabee and his militia liberated the Temple and rededicated it.

During the rededication, they found only one jar of consecrated oil, “and they had enough oil to last for one day. But supernaturally... the Menorah at the temple burnt for eight days.” This miracle of the oil gave birth to Hanukkah, the Feast of Dedication. Stone notes, “Hanukkah is actually a word that refers to the time of dedication and the time of dedication at the temple.”

While not part of the Torah’s seven prescribed feasts, Hanukkah was observed in Jesus’ time: “John 10:22-23 reads... it was at Jerusalem the Feast of Dedication...and Jesus walked in the temple in Solomon’s porch.”

Modern Hanukkah customs include lighting the Menorah, enjoying foods fried in oil and exchanging gifts. These practices remind believers of God’s faithfulness, freedom and the triumph of light over darkness. Stone emphasizes the more profound spiritual connection: “Jesus said in John, ‘I am the Light of the world’...during this season to demonstrate that He was the Light of the world.”

Traditional Christmas also has a fascinating history, as Stone notes. The exact date of Jesus’ birth is unknown, and Dec. 25 was chosen in the 4th century to align with the Roman winter solstice. Early Christian traditions, particularly in Germany and the Nordic regions, shaped Christmas customs like the evergreen tree and gift-giving. St. Nicholas, a 4th-century bishop, inspired the practice of giving gifts to children: “He was known for giving gifts to poor children...he threw bags of gold through their windows and also put money in shoes and stockings.”

Stone reminds believers that both Hanukkah and Christmas are traditions with a profound meaning to them: “Whether you celebrate Hanukkah or whether you celebrate traditional Christmas...both are based on traditions. Both have a spiritual significance.” He encourages honoring Christ while following one’s conscience: “Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling...don’t go against your own conscience.”

Ultimately, both celebrations point to the Light of the World. Hanukkah’s candles symbolize God’s miracle and deliverance, while Christmas celebrates the birth of Jesus, the promised Messiah. Whether lighting the Menorah or decorating the Christmas tree, the focus is the same: “Christ, the true Light shining in the darkness,” bringing hope to a world in need.

3I/ATLAS Is a Galactic Mystery: NASA Confirms It's

Unlike Anything Ever Seen

3I/ATLAS is even puzzling NASA now.

According to Chron, NASA astrochemist Martin Cordiner and his team conducted a study in Chile to examine gases emanating from the surface of the comet. Using the Atacama Large Millimeter Array (ALMA), the scientists discovered “high amounts of methanol and hydrogen cyanide...”

Why is this finding in particular strange?

As Cordiner explained to New Scientist, these two molecules “...are at trace abundances and not the dominant constituents of our own comets.” He further stated, “Here we see that, actually, in this alien comet they’re very abundant.”

In addition to this unusual phenomenon, methanol is reportedly being released from the ice particles around the comet. Cordiner and his team further found that the comet’s expulsion of these gases is “among the most enriched values measured in any comet.”

The Hubble Space Telescope, along with the Jupiter Icy Moons Explorer, has also taken new images of 3I/ATLAS, according to CNN. As the outlet notes, the latest image displays a “glowing halo of gas” that envelops the interstellar object, along with two tails: one composed of dust and the other composed of “electrically charged gas.”

With the comet closest to Earth on Dec. 19, speculation and intrigue surrounding this natural wonder continue to captivate people around the world, with some wondering whether it could be a sign of alien life. Instead of worrying about extraterrestrial visitors, this is a moment to let the beauty of this comet draw our hearts back to prayer, reflection, and a deeper encounter with Jesus, the true light of the world.

AI Apocalypse? Former Google Insider Gives Chilling Warning for 2027

As artificial intelligence accelerates at an unprecedented pace, one former Google insider is sounding a clear and urgent warning: the world is not ready for the shockwaves that are coming our way by 2027.

In a discussion on “The Diary of a CEO,” former Google AI expert and design ethicist Tristan Harris painted a vivid picture of a future many consider unimaginable: “Are a handful of western or US-based AI companies going to consciously distribute that wealth to literally everyone meaning including all the countries around the world whose entire economy was based on a job category that got eliminated?” Harris asks.

The stark reality, he warns, is that AI is already reshaping the job market. Entire industries, including law, finance and customer service, are facing rapid automation. “You have law firms that are currently not wanting to hire junior lawyers because the AI is way better than a junior lawyer who just graduated from law school... You just have this sort of elite managerial class for each of these domains. So you lose intergenerational knowledge transmission, and that creates a societal weakening in the social fabric," he states.

To order James Lasher's new book, The Revelation of Jesus, visit .

He draws a striking analogy between AI and past economic shifts: "AI is like another version of NAFTA... except instead of China appearing on the world stage who will do the manufacturing labor for cheap, suddenly this country of geniuses in a data center created by AI appears on the world stage and it will do all of the cognitive labor in the economy for less than minimum wage," says Harris.

AI, he points out, threatens not only jobs but the very fabric of society.

Yet amid the warnings, there is a call to action and responsibility. Drawing on lessons from past technology revolutions, Harris emphasizes the need for conscious stewardship: "The default path is companies racing to release the most powerful, inscrutable, uncontrollable technology we've ever invented with the maximum incentive to cut corners on , I'm going to devote my life to changing the path that we're currently on. That's what I'm doing."

As 2027 approaches, the question is no longer whether AI will change the world – it is how humanity chooses to respond.
