

Joe Rogan Makes a Surprising Admission About the Influence of Christianity

As Joe Rogan continues to delve deeper into his investigation of Christianity, he has made a surprising admission about his view of Scripture and the wider Christian community.

“The Scripture to me is what’s interesting,” says Rogan. “It’s fascinating. Christianity, at least, is the only thing I have experience with. It works.”

He then noted how kindly he had been treated by Christians once he started attending church.

“People that are Christians that go to this church that I go to that I meet that are Christian, they are the you will ever meet,” Rogan says. “They’re really kind. And they are even more nice out of church.”

Rogan made the point that, unlike other businesses and institutions, Christians are kind and courteous in ways others are not.

Previously, Rogan announced that he had started attending church and has since followed up, discussing his enjoyment of the services.

“It’s a bunch of people that are trying to make their lives better. They’re trying to be a better ’m really interested in what these people were trying to say,” Rogan says.

Rogan even shared the core message of the gospel on his podcast.

“Christianity in particular is most fascinating to me because there’s this one person that everybody agrees existed... and even died in a non-violent way, like didn’t even protest, died on the cross supposedly for our sins.”

As it appears that Rogan’s eyes are continuing to be opened to the truth of the gospel, lift him in prayer that he would see Jesus Christ as the Son of God, the only way to salvation, who loves him and wants to redeem him.

Jenny Weaver Issues Urgent Prophetic Warning: Don’t Play Games With Your Soul

December is set to be a time of fantastic celestial events, with both astronomical and spiritual significance, according to Pastor Troy Brewer.

As Brewer noted, the month is set to begin with a full moon supermoon on Thursday, Dec. 4, the last of three for the year. Brewer described it as “a nightlight” that will blind observers with its brilliance, providing a visual reminder of God's handiwork in creation.

Brewer also discussed how Dec. 7 is significant both historically and astronomically. It marks the anniversary of the attack on Pearl Harbor, which Brewer called "a day of infamy." However, it is also when Mercury will hit its greatest western elongation, appearing closest to the sun and visible before sunrise. "It is all about God speaking something." Observers are encouraged to look toward the eastern sky just before dawn to catch a glimpse of the planet.

Mid-month, the Geminids meteor shower is expected to peak on the night of Dec. 13 and the morning of Dec. 14. The shower, which radiates from the constellation Gemini, can produce up to 120 multi-colored meteors per hour. Brewer called it "the king of the meteor showers" and noted the spiritual symbolism in the constellation: "When we see Him, we will be like Him. His holiness becomes our holiness. His righteousness becomes our righteousness."

Other notable celestial signs include a new moon on Dec. 20, which provides optimal viewing conditions for faint objects such as Orion's sword, a galaxy visible even to the naked eye. The winter solstice will occur on Dec. 21, marking the shortest day in the Northern Hemisphere, and coinciding with the Ursids meteor shower, which radiates from Ursa Minor.

As December unfolds, these celestial events offer more than just a spectacular show—they serve as a reminder of God's presence and purpose in the world. God is inviting us to witness his glory firsthand through these remarkable signs and wonders.

Is Christmas a Pagan Holiday? 10 Biblical Truths Every Christian Must Know

As The Christian Post reported, Rene, 39, died in a motorcycle crash last week. He was a father to four children and was widely loved by his church community. Lead pastor Scott Baugh shared a video on social media, discussing the way Rene's death has badly hit the congregation.

"I know, like so many of us, I'm hurting, and you're hurting," Baugh said. "When we found out that Pastor Josh was killed in that just doesn't feel was an amazing pastor, but to me, he was just Josh. He was a friend as close as a brother to me for 10 years."

Baugh also said while Rene was a fantastic pastor, he was "even more special off that platform or stage."

During the latest Sunday morning service, Baugh said that: “Josh didn’t live for this world alone. Josh is in the presence of Jesus right now.” He then spoke to Rene’s family and promised that Journey would come behind them and support them.

“We’re going to be there for you and your kids. We’re going to be there financially,” Baugh said.

During this time, lift up the Rene family and Journey Church in prayer as they grieve over this tremendous loss.

Trump Urges Nationwide Prayer for Wounded National Guardman

The president is asking Americans to join together in prayer for wounded National Guard member Andrew Wolfe.

According to Fox News, Trump said that over the weekend, he communicated with the families of Sarah Beckstrom and Andrew Wolfe, two members of the National Guard who were shot in Washington, D.C., in the middle of last week. Beckstrom died from the shooting, and Wolfe is currently “fighting for his life.”

Trump spoke with various news outlets on Air Force One, where he said that: “Andrew is fighting for his life, and his parents are unbelievably great people, highly religious people.” He also noted the family’s request that “They’re praying, and they want everybody to pray for Andrew, and he has a chance to make it.”

The president also discussed how he plans to honor Sarah and Andrew, regardless of whether Andrew survives.

The believed shooter is 29-year-old Rahmanullah Lakanwal, who is from Afghanistan.

As Americans witnessed this tragedy, this is the time to unite in prayer, for both Andrew’s recovery and for Sarah’s family during this time of immense grief.
