

Jonathan Cahn, Dinesh D'Souza and Amanda Grace: Urgent Prophetic Warnings for America's Destiny

In a deeply candid conversation with Lecrae, Dr. Tony Evans opened up about his decades in ministry, the intense spiritual warfare that has marked his journey and the recent transition of leadership to his son, Pastor Jonathan Evans.

Evans, founder and senior pastor of Oak Cliff Bible Fellowship in Dallas, said that spiritual warfare often comes not only from the outside world but from within the church itself.

“When you’re developing the church,” he explained, “you get people who have their own independent ideas and they want your platform without supporting your vision.” At times, he said, this can lead to betrayal and division, “because they want the environment but they’re really working for the other side.”

In addition to internal battles, Evans described the increasing hostility from a secular culture that rejects biblical truth.

“When you come out against certain lifestyles or the definition of marriage or the meaning of life or the defining of gender... that is going to bring public rejection of your worldview," he said. "No matter how lovingly you present it."

For Evans, these moments are not merely cultural disagreements but spiritual ones—"warfare issues" that require believers "to keep God's name great while trying to protect yourself or your loved ones in the midst of that."

Evans also reflected on his decision to transition leadership of Oak Cliff Bible Fellowship to his son, Jonathan Evans—a process that had been years in the making. While recent narratives and speculation have surfaced around the internet, Evans says, "It wasn't like it came out of nowhere," he said. "We had meetings about it. It was even bigger than my son—it was about how our church would move to the next generation."

He recalled how Jonathan's calling became evident over time: "When Jonathan graduated from college, he went to the NFL for a few years. His Christian witness was very clear... they would be asking him to lead chapels. Then he decided after football to go to seminary—we didn't push him to go, he decided."

As Jonathan's ministry matured, Evans said he saw God's hand guiding the process. "We decided to put a preliminary plan in place in case this is what God wants," he said. "As circumstances took place and I had to back away quicker than I originally planned, I saw that God had already moved things in this direction that has now been embraced by the church."

Through seasons of warfare, loss, and transition, Evans' message remains steadfast: when life's battles fall outside of our control, they are still "inside of His." His story is a reminder to the church and believers everywhere: truth, courage and faith will always outlast the lies, and God's purposes will prevail even when the world seems determined to do otherwise.

"In discussion with The King, and my immediate and wider family, we have concluded the continued accusations about me distract from the work of His Majesty and the Royal Family," the statement read, according to Fox News.

The statement continues: "I have decided, as I always have, to put my duty to my family and country first. I stand by my decision five years ago to stand back from public His Majesty's agreement, we feel I must now go a step further..."I will therefore no longer use my title or the honours which have been conferred upon me. As I have said previously, I vigorously deny the accusations against me."

As Fox noted, upon this decision, Prince Andrew is relinquishing his title as the Duke of York, but will continue to be a prince due to the fact since he is the late Queen Elizabeth's son.

This decision by the Royal Family follows serious allegations concerning Prince Andrew, as recounted in Virginia Giuffre's memoir, in which she claims to have been trafficked by Jeffrey Epstein and connected to the prince.
