Author and speaker Lisa Bevere exposed the lie of the feminism that's deceiving the country during Rise Up.

“There are battles for the men to fight, and there are battles for the women to fight, but for way too long, the women have been fighting the men’s battles, and the men have been fighting the women’s battles,” Bevere proclaimed from stage. “And the men and the women have been fighting each other.”

She continues: “We will no longer hide behind the garment of a man, because God has not appointed us to be sons, but God has appointed us to be daughters.”

Karen Wheaton: This Is the Call for Our Generation

Karen Wheaton was one of more than a dozen Spirit-empowered speakers who spoke life and recognized the call God has on this generation at Rise Up.

“Deborah and Esther were two women who fulfilled the purpose of God for their generations and answered their call for their time,” Wheaton tells Charisma News. “And so they were bold they were empowered by the Holy Spirit, but most of all, they just said yes to taking on a mandate that could have cost them everything, and in some ways did but gave them what?—an eternal reward. I think this is the call for women of our generation to say you know what this is our day. We got the same call for our time, and our answer has to be yes.”

Rise Up 2017 was part of a collaborative effort with Lou Engle’s The Call and Awaken the Dawn. The four-day non-stop charismatic revival shook the National Mall in Washington, D.C., complete with messages in tongues, shofars, worship flags and prophecies decreed from stage.

Adrianna Phelice Simon was one of the organizers of Rise Up.

“I feel like we’re in a moment, and I’m not sure if everybody can feel it, but this is very strategic,” Simon tells Charisma News. “We are shifting the heavens. ... God always in the Bible, when He went to Gideon, He said, ‘Don’t give me those, that’s too many, that’s too many.’ He’s looking for the remnant, and today in the rain, the remnant is here. We are crying out for our nation, and we’re going to see this thing shift in our generation, and that’s very key. We cannot allow the next generation to receive what the devil has to offer on a silver platter what he had to offer us, so we’re saying no more.”

Cindy Jacobs, who spent much of the day on stage, prophesied that Rise Up was the birth of a new women’s movement, one that would not be driven out of a bitter heart, and Wheaton agrees.

All across America, women have embraced the label “nasty woman,” but that’s not who God has called them to be, the two speakers say.

“The light will always overcome darkness and the good thing is, if God is before us, He is with us,” Wheaton says. “We’re standing for His Word, His will, His purpose and agenda. It brings truth that not only sets us free, it sets them [nasty women] free, too. You know, this word is a word not of anger but a word of love that really satisfies even what those women are looking for, too. Like I said, love is the most powerful weapon in the universe. And when you come, and that’s who God is, and when you come in that spirit and it's the answer for a generation ... that includes those women who are searching, too."

Though women stood in unity on Monday, there is still significant work to be done in the church and in the nation. Multiple speakers called for the body of Christ to unite against the rampant racism that still permeates the country and even Christian hearts.

Simon, a black woman, is holding the church accountable.

"We have to unite. The only thing that'll heal a divided nation is the united church, and we are called as African-Americans to forgive in love and white men and women are called to actually bring forgiveness, actually ask for forgiveness," Simon says. "We're called to come together as one people under the cross of Christ. God is calling us in this hour. No more division, no more this, no more that. We are coming under one purpose, and the purpose of this gathering you know, we can come under different things, but we said we were going to gather under the one thing that unites us and that's Jesus Christ. And whether I'm black, white, Hispanic, Asian, no matter what I am, Christ is my Savior, and if He's your Savior, then we can come together in that.

"So it is time for our church to unite so we can see healing in this land. We want to see healing; we say we want to see it. The only way that the world is going to see it is if the church is first healed."

And to get there, Simon says, it's time for women to stand in the gap and contend for their families.

President Trump Calls for Unity, Faith in Wake of Tragic Las Vegas Shooting

President Donald Trump gave a strong, somber, unifying and faith-focused speech Monday after the tragic shooting in Las Vegas that killed 58 people and wounded 500 more.

According to Fox News, President Trump called the Las Vegas attack an “act of pure evil.”

“To the families of the victims, we are praying for you, and we are here for you, and we ask God to help see you through this very dark period,” the president said from the White House yesterday. “Scripture teaches us the Lord is close to the broken-hearted and saves those who are crushed in spirit. We seek comfort in those words, for we know that God lives in the hearts of those who grieve.”

He also called upon “the bonds that unite us,” including faith, family and shared values, adding, “Our unity cannot be shattered by evil. Our bonds cannot be broken by violence. In times such as these, I know we are searching for some kind of meaning in the chaos, light in the darkness. The answers do not come easy.”

Some may have claimed the faith-based words were out of character for Trump, but award-winning journalist and author Stephen E. Strang is not surprised at all by the president’s sentiments.

Strang is the author of the soon-to-be-released book, God and Donald Trump, where he reveals the strategies, behind-the-scenes activity and profound voices that helped shape the dramatic events of the election and presidency thus far. Strang also shares background into Trump's life that helps give insight to the man—and president—he is today.

And through a personal interview on the campaign trail, Strang brings to light the man behind the scenes, and the man with the same kind of sincerity seen in his most moving speeches.

“With Trump, what you see on television is not what you get behind the scenes,” Strang said. “There is a humility about him we don't see in the liberal media sound bites. He is still a straight shooter, but his sincerity is far more striking than I would have expected. His answers to my questions revealed a confident, determined man who is truly committed to making America great again through principles that honor God rather than defy Him. After that interview, I understood that Donald Trump believes America remains a great country even though we've drifted away from the clear vision of the founders. He possesses an undeniable faith in America, and I realized that a big reason for that is his lifelong faith in God.”

Set for release on Nov. 7, almost a year to the day from the presidential election, God and Donald Trump also takes an incisive look at the factors that drove the largest number of conservative and evangelical voters ever recorded to the polls.

A website and video for God and Donald Trump, which contains a foreword from presidential hopeful and former Arkansas Gov. Mike Huckabee, may be found at ; view the video here. Visitors to the site can also download a free chapter and preorder the book.

Strang is an award-winning journalist and successful businessman who began his career as a newspaper reporter at the Orlando Sentinel before founding a Christian publishing house and media company while interviewing and writing about nearly every Christian leader in the country over the past four decades.

God and Donald Trump is published by Frontline, an imprint of Charisma House, which has published books that challenge, encourage, teach and equip Christians, including 13 New York Times best-sellers.

Is the US Doomed? Theologian Tackles a Major Biblical End-Times Question You've Never Considered

With the end times dominating so many headlines of late both before and after a failed Sept. 23 doomsday prediction, there are a plethora of eschatological questions emerging over what the Bible really says about the end of days.

Among them: Is America part of biblical prophecy? This is a question that author Jeff Kinley tackles in his new book, The End of America? as he explores what various theologians have to say about the matter.

Of course, the U.S. isn't mentioned by name in the biblical Scriptures, leaving the door open to an array of debate about what role, if any, America plays in end times theology.

"It's a very relevant question that we ask, because there are theologians who believe that America is mentioned in Scripture," Kinley recently told "The Billy Hallowell Podcast.” “Obviously not by the name of America, but I outline in the book ... six views of popular theologians who believe that America is identified in Scripture, specifically as it relates to the end times.”

In the end, while much is uncertain, Kinley said that there are two facts people can focus in on. First, he spoke of Israel’s founding as a nation in 1948—something that many people believe to be prophetic in nature.

“We were a part of that as Americans, as a country rather,” he said. “We sort of acted like a midwife in helping Israel be born and we have supported Israel through that. In fact, [we’ve] been Israel’s greatest ally from that time, until now. In that sense, we’ve had a role in the end times.”

Kinley also noted that the U.S. has “really pioneered the modern world expansion of the gospel” like no other country, explaining how America has taken that message to the globe.

“As we are living in these last days, I think America has had that role,” he said. “The question then becomes, what will happen to America and what will America look like when we actually reach the days of Revelation?”

Kinley attempts to answer these questions by providing potential scenarios in The End of America?

As for the current state of the country, he said that the U.S. is “in crisis right now” and is “at a critical state of decline,” tackling in his book the reasons why he believes this is the case, including the fact that the proportion of “nones”—those unaffiliated with a faith—has grown in recent years.

“I think we’re just, we’re thinking less of God,” he said. “We’re becoming much more secularistic in our approach to things and more religiously unaffiliated as ever before. I think there’s a decline in spirituality.”

In the end, though, Kinley said that he believes it's possible to turn things around in America via her citizens.

"Can America be saved? My answer to that is, I'm not sure that America as the country will or will not be saved in the end, but I do know that Americans can be saved," he said. "That's really our call is to rise up and to make this our finest hour as believers, because we may well indeed be in those last hours."
