

Have We Been Taking Communion All Wrong?

Something remarkable is happening right now in our world—something many believers might be overlooking. According to ministry leader John Bevere, we have entered a critical prophetic window that could be the final 50 years before Jesus' return.

This isn't just speculation. There's biblical precedent for it, and Bevere believes the signs are all around us.

The Final Jubilee: What It Means for Us

For centuries, Jewish scholars have taught that most biblical prophecies would be fulfilled in the last 50 years of an age—a period they call the final Jubilee. Why is this significant now? Because both Israel and the Roman Catholic Church have declared 2025 to be the Year of Jubilee.

"We have 50 years," Bevere says. "We're in the final 50 years."

That alone should make us pay attention. But it doesn't stop there.

The Signs Are Everywhere: Are We Watching?

Bevere points to 2 Thessalonians 2, which warns that a great apostasy—a mass falling away from the faith—must happen before the Antichrist is revealed. And we're already seeing this unfold.

"How many people today of those 66 million people that have walked away from the faith," Bevere asks, "how many of those people believe they're just fine with Jesus?"

That's the deception. They believe they're okay, but they have veered off course. Jesus Himself warned in Matthew 24:4, "Take heed that no one deceives you."

And here's the reality: deception is the number one sign of the times.

Bevere explains why deception is so dangerous:

"Deception is so scary—why? Because it's deceiving! The person who's deceived believes with all their heart they're right."

This is happening now. People are drifting away from biblical truth, believing they're still in good standing with God. Churches are watering down doctrine. False teachings are creeping in. And the falling away is accelerating.

The Urgency of the Hour

Many believers have become complacent, thinking they have plenty of time. But Jesus specifically warned against that mindset.

"Because the person who says, 'The Lord delays His coming,' is the person that becomes worldly."

The early church didn't think this way. They gathered together, talking about prophecy, watching for signs, living with an expectation that Jesus could return at any moment. They weren't doom-and-gloom—they were fired up for the kingdom.

And that's exactly what Bevere is calling the church to do now.

What Should We Do?

This isn't the time for distractions. It's not the time to sit back and assume everything will continue as usual. It's time to prepare.

Jesus is coming, and the Bible makes it clear we are in the window of the latter rain.

Bevere urges believers to do two things:

1. Pay attention. Don't be deceived. Stay rooted in Scripture, not culture.
2. Start talking about prophecy. "The early church talked about it. They would gather together, and all they would do was talk about prophecy."

We are stepping into a prophetic season unlike any before, will you be ready?

Christians Beware: How 'Christ is King' Is Being Twisted Online

We live in a broken world where words are weaponized, and even the phrase "Christ is King" has become a point of contention.

A new report from the Network Contagion Research Institute, co-authored by Dr. Jordan B. Peterson and the Rev. Johnnie Moore, warns that "extremist actors have co-opted Christian language" to push "exclusionary ideologies."

This isn't just an academic exercise. The study highlights a five-fold spike in mentions on X of "Christ is King" from 2021 to 2024, particularly around Easter, when researchers say that "roughly 17% of all mentions [were] linked to hateful rhetoric." The report claims that figures such as Nick Fuentes and Candace Owens have amplified the phrase in ways that promote antisemitism.

Moore, president of the Congress of Christian Leaders, emphasized that while he does not believe the phrase itself is hateful, it has been misused. "I certainly don't believe that it's antisemitic to say Christ is King or Jesus is Lord," he clarified. "It's a Christian phrase, but like all phrases, it can be used by people who hate others in a hateful way."

This is where the real issue lies—not in the phrase itself, but in the battle over its meaning.

The report acknowledges that “Christ is King” has “deep theological roots in the Christian, but especially, Catholic tradition, deriving from various New Testament sources.”

However, its argument hinges on how the phrase is used online, suggesting that nearly half of all posts containing it are driven by figures “promoting hateful—and especially antisemitic—narratives.”

Moore expressed concern over the digital manipulation of religious speech. AI-driven analysis, he noted, helped identify bot activity designed to push antisemitic content and distort public discourse. “There was an avalanche of antisemitic content,” he said, pointing to how bots have also been used to attack figures like Elon Musk and President Donald Trump.

Arrested for John 3:16?

Pastor Faces Charges in Attack on Christianity

In a move that seems more fitting for a dystopian novel than a democratic society, a 76-year-old retired Baptist pastor in Northern Ireland has been charged under the Abortion Services (Safe Access Zones) Act for delivering an open-air sermon based on John 3:16.

As reported by The Christian Post, pastor Clive Johnston, a former president of the Association of Baptist Churches in Ireland, now faces allegations of attempting to “influence” individuals accessing abortion services and of failing to leave the area when instructed by police.

His supposed transgression? Sharing a message of God’s love without any mention of abortion. ☐

The incident occurred on July 7, 2024, near Causeway Hospital in Coleraine, where Pastor Johnston preached to a small gathering of about a dozen people. The group sang hymns and displayed a wooden cross, but notably lacked any placards or references to abortion.

Despite this, authorities deemed the service a violation of the buffer zone regulations. Simon Calvert, Deputy Director of The Christian Institute, aptly described the prosecution as “an outrageous restriction on freedom of religion and freedom of speech.”

And this isn’t an isolated incident.

In Scotland, the introduction of 200-meter buffer zones around abortion clinics has led to alarming interpretations of the law. United States Vice President JD Vance recently highlighted concerns that such laws could criminalize individuals for praying in their own homes if visible from the street.

Initially dismissed as misinformation, Scottish Green MSP Gillian Mackay, who introduced the buffer zone bill, later conceded that “performative” prayer inside one’s home could indeed be illegal, depending on who is passing by the window.

The implications are chilling. When a government begins to dictate where and how individuals can express their faith, even within the confines of their own homes, it signals a disturbing shift away from foundational freedoms. The arrest of a 74-year-old grandmother in Glasgow for holding a sign that read, “Coercion is a crime, here to talk, if you want,” further exemplifies this overreach. Her peaceful offer of conversation was met with handcuffs and charges under the new buffer zone law.

These developments should serve as a wake-up call.

As governments increasingly sideline religious freedoms in favor of secular ideologies, the persecution of Christians in the West becomes not just a possibility but a mounting reality.

Red Heifer Delay: A Prophetic Setback or a Secret Plan?

The search for a perfect red heifer—an essential requirement for Jewish purification rites—has hit another obstacle. According to Rabbi Azariah Ariel of the Temple Institute, they cannot confirm if any of the five red heifers currently in Israel meet the strict biblical criteria outlined in Numbers 19. A few stray white hairs are enough to disqualify them, meaning new calves must be bred, raised and examined before the purification ceremony can take place.

On the surface, this seems like a significant delay, potentially pushing back the timeline for the restoration of Temple services by several years. But a closer look at Rabbi Ariel's wording raises an intriguing possibility: Is this truly a delay, or is there more happening behind the scenes?

He stated, "At this moment, it is unclear whether we have in our possession in Israel a red heifer that is verifiably kosher." That's a precise and cautious choice of words. Could it be that a suitable red heifer exists but is not being publicly confirmed for security reasons?

The Temple Mount: A Growing Flashpoint

Meanwhile, Jewish interest in the Temple Mount and the rebuilding of the Third Temple is surging. What was once a fringe movement is gaining mainstream traction, with activist groups pushing harder for access and worship rights. Even political figures are getting involved.

Have you felt it?

The world is shifting—fast.

Chaos, division and fear are growing stronger by the day. Rabbi Kirt Schneider is calling it what it is: a great eruption of darkness.

In his latest message, Rabbi Schneider highlights a key turning point in this decline: the federal legalization of same-sex marriage. “The floodgates really opened when the United States legalized federally accepting same-sex marriage,” he says. From that moment, society began unraveling. Then came COVID-19, rewiring people’s minds and breaking down human connection. “Everyone’s mind is connected to their technology... it has separated humanity.”

Deception and Division

Beyond social breakdown, global hostilities are rising, and political divisions have turned into outright hatred. “People can no longer just disagree. Now, if you disagree, you’re hated.” But the biggest danger isn’t political—it’s spiritual.

Jesus warned in Matthew 24 that mass deception would come, and Rabbi Schneider says it's here. "Many will come in my name saying, 'I am the Christ,' and will mislead many." This deception has even infiltrated the church, with many denominations compromising on biblical truth.

And it's only getting worse. "The next huge wave of mass deception... is Christian leaders teaching their congregations: You don't have to believe in Jesus to be saved." Many will claim that all religions lead to heaven, ignoring the clear words of Christ.

Stand Firm in Truth

Despite the darkness, believers have hope. "Look up," Rabbi Schneider reminds us. "Your redemption draweth nigh." Now more than ever, we must cling to God's Word and refuse to be swept away by deception.

Want to hear more? Watch Rabbi Schneider's full message and prepare—because the times are changing, and the truth has never been more important.

Jonathan Cahn: The Antichrist's Plan Is Unfolding RIGHT NOW

On Purim 2025, a blood moon appeared, and according to Rabbi Jason Sobel, it was more than just a celestial event—it was a sign. “A blood moon is often times a sign that the sword, conflict, is coming to the world,” he explained. If history tells us anything, these cosmic signals are worth paying attention to.

From the expulsion of Jews from Spain in 1492 to Israel's War of Independence in 1948 and the Six-Day War in 1967, blood moons have coincided with defining moments in Jewish history. So what does this latest one mean for the future? According to Sobel, it's about more than just Israel—it's about a global shift that is already unfolding.

A Warning for Israel's Enemies

The timing of this blood moon is critical. Sobel noted that “many rabbis see this sign of the blood moon as representing a major change for good for the Jewish people.” But that change might come through conflict first. He pointed to groups like Hamas and Hezbollah, as well as Iran, as forces that could be facing serious consequences soon.

Why? Because history and prophecy both point to the fall of Israel's enemies after such signs. “There's a famous Rabbi, Rabbi David Kimchi, and he said when you have a total eclipse that appears like a blood moon, it symbolizes the fall of the wicked.” Sobel sees this as particularly significant given Iran’s growing hostility toward Israel and its nuclear ambitions. Could we be on the verge of a turning point in the Middle East? If so, this blood moon may have been the warning shot.

America’s Role in the Coming Conflict

Unlike previous blood moons that were most visible over Israel, this one was seen primarily in the Americas. Sobel sees this as a sign that the United States will play a key role in what comes next. “Because this solar eclipse is going to be seen primarily in the Americas, it’s significant for the U.S.,” he stated.

This aligns with recent political developments. President Donald Trump recently issued a strong statement against Hamas, saying he was committed to ensuring Israel has “everything they need to finish the job.” Sobel finds the timing remarkable, especially since the statement was released during Shabbat Zachor, the Sabbath of Remembrance—a time when Jews read about the biblical command to wipe out Amalek, a historical enemy of Israel.

A Temporary Peace Before a Greater War?

If Sobel's analysis is correct, we may be entering a brief period of peace—but not the kind that lasts. "I believe this could be a sign that in the coming year or so, there's going to be a shift in the Middle East... a change," he said. If Iran is weakened or its nuclear ambitions curtailed, Israel could experience a newfound sense of security.

However, Sobel warns that this peace may only be setting the stage for something bigger. "The book of Esther is about change... but I believe it's a type of peace that has to occur to prepare for the great end-time battle—the War of Gog and Magog." In biblical prophecy, this war is said to involve a coalition of nations coming against Israel, only to be supernaturally defeated.

70,000 Decisions for Christ? The Revival That's Shaking the World

The world is primed for a spiritual awakening, and Pastor Mike Signorelli believes that revival is here. With his groundbreaking film, The Domino Revival, Signorelli has seen firsthand the transformative power of God working through media. And now, with the upcoming Domino Day on Apr. 11, he's calling believers everywhere to join in what he sees as an End-Times harvest of souls.

April 11 could be the day "your family can actually get saved, the ones that you've been praying for for years," Signorelli proclaimed. "April 11, your sons and daughters can get free from drug addiction. It's all possible." This isn't just wishful thinking—it's based on the staggering impact the film has already had. "Over 70,000 people scanned a QR code and said, 'I decided to cancel my suicide. I decided to follow Christ, and I want to be disciplined.'" If this happened in theaters, what could happen when Domino Day takes over churches and homes worldwide?

Breaking News. Spirit-Filled Stories. Subscribe to Charisma on YouTube now!

The strategy is simple but profound: take The Domino Revival beyond the silver screen and into physical spaces where people can encounter God's presence. "The reason why we want to get people into physical spaces is because... before the end of the movie was over, people were weeping. People were getting free," he said. In addition to salvation testimonies, the film has documented "medically verifiable miracles" with "doctors' proof" that faith can lead to physical healing. "People literally came into the theaters on crutches and left holding their own crutches. People were getting out of wheelchairs."
