

Brandon Lake Goes Viral After Bold Challenge to Christians at K-Love Awards

Throughout the interview, Marzulli connected the UFO phenomenon to biblical themes including Genesis 6, the Nephilim and Jesus' warning that the last days would resemble "the days of Noah."

"The breeding program is real," he said. "It ties back to Genesis 3:15. It ties into Genesis 6. It ties into what Jesus said, 'It will be like the days of Noah.'"

Marzulli claimed many alleged abductees describe repeated encounters throughout their lives and said those testimonies should not be dismissed.

"These are avatars. They are meat suits for the demons to inhabit," he said while discussing the commonly reported "gray" aliens.

Marzulli also suggested Spielberg has spent decades preparing audiences for disclosure themes through films such as "E.T.," "Taken" and "Close Encounters of the Third Kind."

"Wouldn't it be wonderful for people to know they're coming?" Marzulli said while analyzing Spielberg's remarks in the trailer. "Is he telling us that all of this is true or is he playing with words?"

As the discussion surrounding UFO disclosure continues to intensify, Marzulli urged Christians to remain grounded in Scripture and not be deceived.

"Cling to Jesus," he said. "Understand that what was foretold is unfolding."

“Do not be deceived,” Marzulli added. “The Gospels are true. Jesus is Lord. Jesus is God.”

Pastor Shane Idleman Shares Emotional Cancer Update: ‘The Hope Is Only in God’

Rabbi Kirt Schneider looked at the modern world recently and basically asked the question a lot of people avoid because they are too busy doom-scrolling, binge-watching and arguing online: Does anybody notice how unstable everything has become?

Not unstable in some abstract philosophical sense. I mean visibly unstable.

China circling Taiwan like a shark. Iran refusing to back down. North Korea openly threatening nuclear retaliation. Artificial intelligence evolving faster than governments, schools and even its own inventors can comprehend.

And meanwhile, most people are still debating celebrities on TikTok.

Schneider did not come across like a man trying to create panic. He sounded more like somebody standing in the middle of a city square watching people casually sip coffee while smoke rises in the distance.

"We are living in the most dangerous climate imaginable," Schneider said.

The strongest section of his message centered on artificial intelligence. Not because Schneider invented the warnings, but because he pointed to the growing chorus of concern coming directly from the people building the technology.

Order Rabbi Kirt Schneider's New Book, "The Mystery of the Tabernacle" on !

OpenAI CEO Sam Altman has acknowledged that AI could ultimately become catastrophic for humanity.

Elon Musk has repeatedly compared advanced artificial intelligence to summoning something dangerous that humanity may not be able to control.

Physicist Stephen Hawking warned before his death that fully developed AI could end the human race.

Former Google AI researcher Geoffrey Hinton has spent recent years warning that society still does not grasp the scale of what is approaching.

Think about that for a moment. The people building the technology are talking like characters at the beginning of a disaster movie, and society's response is basically, "Cool, can it help me write emails faster?"

Schneider warned AI could usher in:

- Loss of human control.

- Deepfake deception.
- Cyberattacks.
- Autonomous weapons systems.
- Mass surveillance.
- Massive job displacement.
- Concentrated power among a handful of tech elites.

“The necessity of humans is becoming obsolete,” Schneider said.

That line lands differently when you look around at a culture already struggling to remember what humans are for in the first place.

Schneider also pointed to the spiritual condition of modern culture, contrasting the innocence of his childhood with today’s nonstop stream of violence, corruption, lust and division flooding phones and screens every hour of the day.

“When we close our eyes now, we’re not seeing innocent cartoons,” Schneider said. “We’re seeing the filth of our culture.”

And underneath all of it was his central message: repentance.

Not theatrical panic. Not hiding in bunkers. Not paranoia.

Repentance.

Quoting Psalm 119, Schneider said, “I stand in fear of your judgments.”

“Repent for the kingdom of God is at hand,” he added, repeating the words of both John the Baptist and Jesus.

Schneider’s point was not that Christians should collapse into fear every time another headline flashes across a screen. His point was that civilization keeps confusing comfort with security while the entire structure underneath it groans louder by the day.

Temple Mount Chaos: Priests Carry Out Ancient Biblical Offering Amid Arrests and Clashes

A group of Jewish Temple activists and kohanim reenacted the biblical Shteí HaLechem, or Two Loaves offering, on the Temple Mount during Shavuot, despite the site being officially closed to Jewish visitors.

According to reporting by Israel365 News, the operation involved months of preparation, rabbinical consultation and coordinated planning. Participants entered the Temple Mount carrying specially prepared loaves and priestly garments before being confronted by police and Arab worshippers.

Ariel Cohen, the kohen who performed the waving ceremony, described the scene as chaotic.

“During the entire ascent, there was chaos,” Cohen said. “At least three young Arab men beat members of the group and tried to block their path.”

Participants said chairs were thrown at the group as they ran across the Temple Mount attempting to complete the ritual. Israeli police later arrested 13 of the 14 participants and confiscated the loaves.

Eliyah Nachman Cohen, who served as the backup kohen, said the group believed God helped them complete the ceremony despite setbacks and arrests.

“We truly felt the hand of God,” he said.

The activists viewed the event as part of a larger movement toward restoring Temple worship in Jerusalem. Rafael Ben Weis, one of the youngest participants, said the goal extends beyond a single demonstration.

“The Temple belongs to all of the Jewish people – this is not a private matter,” he said.

For years, centuries even, many who profess Jesus as the Son of God have also insisted biblical prophecy surrounding Israel, Jerusalem and a future Temple should be viewed symbolically.

Yet here we are, watching priests train for Temple service, ritual offerings being carried onto the Temple Mount, and growing public movements calling for the restoration of biblical worship in Jerusalem.

At some point, the evidence becomes impossible to ignore.

The Bible says these things would matter in the last days. The Bible says Jerusalem would become the center of global attention. The Bible says the Temple would once again stand at the center of prophetic events.

And now, piece by piece, we are watching it happen in real time.

Spencer Pratt Says Prayer and Trust in God Are Guiding His Mayoral Campaign

Los Angeles mayoral candidate Spencer Pratt says prayer and trust in God have become central to his life and campaign as he seeks to lead one of America's largest cities.

During a recent interview with Fox News host Kaleigh McEnany, Pratt spoke openly about his faith and the role it plays in his decisions. He also credited his wife, Heidi Montag, for helping strengthen his relationship with Jesus.

"My wife is very connected with Jesus," Pratt said, adding that she brought him "into the light."

Pratt said he has learned to place his campaign in God's hands.

"It's been very empowering to just pray and just be on his path, and just say, 'God, if you want me to save these animals, save these humans, and protect my city, just keep putting me in the place where I can do that,'" Pratt said. "And, if it's not God's plan, it won't happen and I won't have that pressure and that burden on my heart that I now feel because I am so close to being able to do it."

Pratt also described relying on prayer before participating in a recent mayoral debate. He admitted he had been nervous because he had never acted as a politician before.

"I had to say, 'God, if you want this for me, please just have me destroy them live on tv,'" Pratt said. "And, I walked off that stage, and this young high school kid came right up to me, he said, 'Thank you, sir, for being the only one that told the truth up there on the stage.'"

Pratt said, "For me, when I set out on this mission, it was just to get the truth at the highest platform I could, that's all I ever thought I was going to be able to do."

Third Temple Momentum Surges as Israeli Leaders Push for Greater Control of Temple Mount

Noise has a way of exhausting the soul. Opinions compete for attention. Emotions pull the heart in different directions. Endless voices online claim spiritual authority while confusion quietly settles into the minds of many believers trying to hear God clearly.

During a recent teaching, evangelist and author David Diga Hernandez encouraged Christians to pursue discernment through humility, healing and deeper sensitivity to the Holy Spirit.

"You will become aware of the spiritual realm," Hernandez said. "It's going to open your eyes, and you will begin to see with clarity in the spirit."

Humility Clears the Heart

Hernandez explained that discernment grows strongest in believers who remain yielded to the Holy Spirit instead of relying on personal instincts.

"Trust not in your ability to hear the Holy Spirit," he said. "Trust in the Holy Spirit's ability to speak to you."

He warned that pride quietly interferes with spiritual clarity because it resists correction and clings to personal assumptions.

"Pride is a stumbling block to discernment because it doesn't allow for course correction," Hernandez said.

His message pointed believers back toward dependence on God instead of confidence in personal perception. According to Hernandez, discernment flows from intimacy with the Holy Spirit and a teachable heart.

Bitterness Distorts Spiritual Vision

Hernandez also addressed the effect unforgiveness can have on spiritual growth. He explained that unresolved hurt often shapes how people interpret situations and relationships without realizing it.

"When you allow for that root of unforgiveness, that root of bitterness to take its place in your heart, it begins to produce now these negative attributes, or a filter through which you see everything and everyone else," he said.

He encouraged believers to allow God to heal wounded places in the heart so discernment can flow through peace rather than suspicion.

“Discern through the lens of love,” Hernandez said. “The love of God in your heart gets rid of all fear.”

Throughout the teaching, Hernandez repeatedly emphasized the security believers have in Christ and the steady guidance of the Holy Spirit.

“Think about the fact that He protects you, that the Holy Spirit guides you, that ultimately He’s going to keep you because He has saving power and keeping power,” he said.

Order Jonathan Cahn’s New Book, “The Altar of Pergamon” on !

Scripture Sharpens Discernment

A major focus of Hernandez’s message centered on devotion to Scripture. He explained that believers grow in discernment by learning God’s nature through His Word.

“Anything the Holy Spirit speaks to you is going to be backed by His word,” Hernandez said.

He encouraged Christians to move beyond surface-level familiarity with Scripture into deeper understanding of God’s character and ways.

“You begin to think like He thinks,” Hernandez said. “You begin to reason like He reasons.”

Referencing Moses’ relationship with God, Hernandez said true spiritual maturity develops through closeness with the Lord.

“The children of Israel knew God’s acts, but only Moses knew His ways,” he said.

Slowing Down to Hear God Clearly

Hernandez urged believers to create quiet moments throughout the day to become more aware of the Holy Spirit's presence. He said many Christians move so quickly through life that they never pause long enough to reflect on what God is speaking.

"Slow the pace of your life," Hernandez said. "Pause to ponder."

He encouraged believers to spend time meditating on Scripture after prayer instead of immediately shifting their attention elsewhere.

"Put the phone down," he said. "Think about what you read. Pray about what you read. Ask the Lord to speak to you."

Hernandez also challenged Christians to regularly acknowledge the Holy Spirit throughout the day.

"Acknowledge Him at least every 20 minutes or so," he said. "Just stop to acknowledge the presence of the Holy Spirit."

Growing in Spiritual Clarity

Hernandez continued to encourage believers by explaining that discernment grows through steady fellowship with God, devotion to His Word and sensitivity to the Holy Spirit.

"You deal with those pitfalls. You get in the word. You slow down and practice sensitivity to the spirit," Hernandez said. "Now you have true discernment."

His message serves as a reminder that God faithfully guides those of us who seek Him with humility and open hearts. As we draw closer to the Holy Spirit, discernment becomes less about striving and more about recognizing the familiar voice of the One who leads us.

Franklin Graham Rebukes James Talarico's Abortion Claims: 'That's an Absolute Lie'

Evangelist Franklin Graham publicly rebuked Texas Democratic Senate candidate James Talarico this week after the lawmaker claimed the Bible is "silent on abortion."

"Texas Democratic Senate candidate James Talarico couldn't be more wrong!" Graham wrote in a post on X. "The Bible is not silent on abortion as he claims—that's an absolute lie."

Texas Democratic Senate candidate James Talarico couldn't be more wrong! The Bible is not silent on abortion as he claims—that's an absolute lie. God commands us, "You shall not murder" (Exodus 20:13). Abortion is taking a life—it is murder. The Word of God tells us we are...

— Franklin Graham (@Franklin_Graham) May 27, 2026

Graham pointed directly to Scripture in his rebuke of Talarico's comments.

“God commands us, ‘You shall not murder’ (Exodus 20:13),” Graham wrote. “Abortion is taking a life—it is murder.”

He continued, “The Word of God tells us we are created in the image of God and consistently underscores the value of human life. Jeremiah 1:5 says, ‘Before I formed you in the womb I knew you, before you were born I set you apart...’”

Talarico recently argued during an interview that “Jesus never talks about abortion” and that Christians should look at broader biblical themes when forming ethical positions on the issue.

Graham also referenced another past controversy involving the Texas lawmaker.

“In 2021, this same Democratic candidate opposed a bill to ban men from women’s sports, saying that ‘God is non-binary,’” Graham wrote.

He concluded the post with a warning to voters and Christians alike.

“Don’t be deceived by wicked politicians spouting lies like this.”

Scientists Warn Antarctica's 'Doomsday Glacier' Could Collapse – But Is There a Bigger Picture?

The headlines coming out of Antarctica sound like something lifted from the pages of a science fiction novel.

Scientists studying Antarctica's massive Thwaites Glacier, often called the "Doomsday Glacier," warn that its eastern ice shelf is on the verge of collapse. Researchers at the British Antarctic Survey say the floating ice shelf that has helped restrain the glacier's movement is "poised to disintegrate," with some expecting the breakup to occur this year.

The glacier itself contains enough ice to contribute roughly 26 inches of global sea-level rise if it were to collapse entirely.

The reports are dramatic, and the media response is predictable.

Climate activists immediately seize on every environmental headline as proof that humanity's greatest problem is carbon emissions. Governments use the fear to justify more regulations, more control and more centralized authority. The same voices that insist humanity can save the planet if only enough power is handed to political institutions continue preaching their gospel of climate alarmism.

Christians should reject that narrative.

Scripture teaches that God remains sovereign over creation.

“The earth is the Lord’s, and the fullness thereof” (Ps. 24:1). The future is not dictated by politicians, bureaucrats or international climate summits.

At the same time, believers cannot ignore what is happening around us.

Jesus commanded us to watch. Not watch for climate change. Watch for prophetic convergence. That brings us to an uncomfortable question.

What if reports like those coming from Antarctica are not evidence of humanity destroying the planet, but reminders that creation itself is moving toward the prophetic future God revealed thousands of years ago?

Jesus spoke directly about conditions that would characterize the period leading to His return.

“There will be signs in the sun, moon, and stars, and on the earth distress of nations in perplexity because of the roaring of the sea and waves” (Luke 21:25).

For centuries, readers puzzled over that statement. Today, oceans dominate international conversations. Rising seas, changing coastlines, extreme storms, marine disruptions and environmental uncertainty fill news cycles across the globe. The sea has become a source of growing concern for governments and populations alike.

Then there is the book of Revelation.

Order James Lasher’s New Book, “The Revelation of Jesus” on !

The trumpet judgments and bowl judgments contain repeated references to catastrophic impacts on Earth’s waters.

“The second angel sounded, and something like a great mountain burning with fire was thrown into the sea, and a third of the sea became blood. A third of the living creatures in the sea died, and a third of the ships were destroyed” (Rev. 8:8-9).

Later, the judgments intensify.

“The second angel poured out his bowl on the sea, and it became like the blood of a dead man, and every living creature in the sea died” (Rev. 16:3).

Fresh water systems are also struck.

“The third angel poured out his bowl on the rivers and springs of water, and they became blood” (Rev. 16:4).

No one is claiming a glacier in Antarctica fulfills those prophecies.

The question is whether humanity is entering a season that prepares the world to understand them.

Prophecy unfolds in stages.

The generation that eventually witnesses Revelation’s judgments will not suddenly wake up one morning to a completely different world. Conditions develop. Expectations shift. Foundations are laid.

The world is already becoming accustomed to discussions about ocean instability, water crises and environmental upheaval.

That reality should capture the attention of every student of biblical prophecy.

A third prophetic connection appears in Romans 8.

Paul writes that creation itself groans under the weight of a fallen world.

“For we know that the whole creation groans and travails in pain together until now” (Rom. 8:22).

That groaning appears throughout Scripture.

Jesus warned of “famines, pestilences, and earthquakes in various places” and called them “the beginning of sorrows” (Matt. 24:7-8).

Environmental disturbances command global attention. Nations fear instability. Populations demand solutions. Governments seek more power.

The Antarctica story fits into that larger picture.

Not because it validates climate alarmism. Not because it proves any particular scientific model. Not because it establishes a prophetic timetable.

It matters because it reminds us that the world is not moving toward human utopia.

The Bible never predicts a golden age created by technology, political cooperation or environmental management. Scripture points toward increasing instability before Christ establishes His kingdom.

The reports surrounding Thwaites Glacier raise important questions. Scientists continue debating how rapidly events will unfold and what the ultimate consequences may be. Yet the broader lesson remains unchanged.

Christians should pay attention.

We should observe world events through the lens of Scripture.

We should remember Christ’s command to watch.

“And what I say to you, I say to all: Watch!” (Mark 13:37).

Every headline pointing to upheaval in creation serves as another reminder that this present world is temporary, and that the King is coming.
