

What Every Christian Needs to Know About Spielberg's New 'Disclosure Day' Movie

Christian author and disclosure researcher L.A. Marzulli says Steven Spielberg's upcoming film "Disclosure Day" is preparing audiences for what he believes is a coming spiritual deception tied to UFO disclosure.

During a recent interview with Charisma Media, Marzulli reacted to the movie's final trailer, calling it "very disturbing."

"Spielberg filmically is signaling," Marzulli said. "It's a global event. It's absolutely a global event."

The trailer references a "79-year cover-up," which Marzulli connected directly to the 1947 Roswell incident.

"That begins the 79-year-old coverup that has been going on for 79 years," he said. "This 79-year-old cover-up has to end."

Marzulli argued the film presents disclosure as something positive and unifying, but warned viewers not to embrace that message.

"It's not a good thing," he said. "You don't abduct 5-year-old boys and implant them. You don't abduct girls like this."

He repeatedly framed the phenomenon as spiritual deception rather than extraterrestrial contact.

"The spirit expressly states that in the latter days some will depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and the doctrine of demons," Marzulli said. "Well, this is exactly where we are."

Marzulli also pointed to imagery in the trailer involving possession-like manifestations, altered DNA and shape-shifting entities.

"That's possession, but I might be wrong," he said. "She might actually be talking to them. Or is she being a conduit? We just don't know yet."

Pastor Shane Idleman and his wife, Morgan Idleman, shared an emotional and deeply personal update about his ongoing battle with head and neck cancer during a recent church gathering.

Idleman explained that he chose to speak publicly because many people within and outside the ministry had been asking for updates and prayer requests.

"I didn't choose this, but I guess it chose me," he said as he described the difficult journey of navigating treatment options, medical opinions and spiritual questions.

The pastor revealed he consulted specialists from major medical centers including USC and City of Hope while also researching alternative therapies. He described traveling to Mexico for treatment at a clinic offering therapies not approved in the United States, including dendritic cell therapy, high-dose vitamin C and hyperthermia treatments.

During his stay, however, Idleman suffered severe reactions involving electrolyte imbalance, uncontrollable shaking and cardiac monitoring that left doctors concerned.

"My body was in shock," he said, recalling one of the frightening episodes. "They had an ambulance on standby."

After multiple medical incidents, Idleman said he felt God redirecting him away from the treatment path he had pursued.

“God stopped it. God rejected it,” he said. “The hope is only in God.”

Idleman also shared that surgeons warned him about the possible long-term consequences of aggressive surgery and radiation treatments, including facial deformity, damage to vocal cords and permanent saliva gland issues.

As a result, he said surgery, radiation and chemotherapy are not currently part of his plan.

“There’s no plan B for me,” Idleman said. “Surgery is not an option. Radiation’s not an option. Chemotherapy at this point is not an option. So trusting God.”

Throughout the emotional update, both Shane and Morgan Idleman spoke openly about the fear, uncertainty and spiritual battle surrounding the diagnosis while continuing to lean on their faith in Jesus Christ.

Morgan Idleman described the emotional tension of balancing faith with uncertainty while continuing family life and ministry responsibilities.

“Our treatment plan is Jesus,” she said. “For some reason, I’m just like, ‘he’s going to be fine.’”

Cancer is a brutal and deeply personal battle that impacts not only the person facing the diagnosis, but also the spouse, children, family and church community walking through it alongside them. In moments like these, the body of Christ comes together not simply with words, but with prayer, compassion and faith.

As Shane and Morgan continue to navigate this difficult season, we join with their congregation in praying for healing, strength, peace and renewed joy in their lives. We pray for God's comfort to surround their family, for wisdom in every decision ahead and for the healing touch of Jesus to rest upon Shane's body.

In Jesus name, we speak peace over their home, strength over their hearts and complete healing over Pastor Shane Idleman.

AI, Iran and China: Rabbi Kirt Schneider Warns the World Is Entering Prophetic Territory

Momentum surrounding the possibility of a Third Temple in Jerusalem continues increasing as Israeli officials, rabbis and prophecy teachers openly discuss Jewish worship rights and future construction plans connected to the Temple Mount.

During a recent episode of "The Week in Bible Prophecy" from Prophecy Watchers, with Mondo Gonzales and Joe Hawkins, as the duo examined several developments coming out of Israel and connected them to biblical prophecy and the growing religious fervor centered on the Temple Mount.

The discussion highlighted three recent reports involving Israeli leaders and rabbis advocating for expanded Jewish activity at the contested holy site.

Recent developments include:

- Israeli National Security Minister Itamar Ben-Gvir declaring that Israel has “restored sovereignty” over the Temple Mount during Jerusalem Day celebrations.
- Rabbi Eliyahu urging Israeli leaders to establish a synagogue on the Temple Mount as a precursor to a future temple.
- Orthodox rabbis increasingly supporting Jewish access to designated areas of the mount while maintaining restrictions around the location traditionally associated with the Holy of Holies.

The recent surge of headlines gives us hard evidence of accelerating change surrounding the Temple Mount.

Years of preparation by religious organizations in Israel have already laid much of the groundwork required for renewed temple worship.

The hosts pointed to several completed or ongoing preparations:

- Priestly garments have been recreated.
- Sacred temple vessels and furnishings have been produced.
- The golden menorah has been completed.

- Levitical priests continue receiving worship and music training.
- Stones for a future structure are currently being prepared outside Jerusalem.
- Religious leaders continue discussing red heifer purification ceremonies tied to temple service.

The discussion identified two major shifts fueling the movement:

- Increasing political support for Jewish prayer rights on the Temple Mount.
- Expanding rabbinic approval for Jewish presence and worship activities on the site.

Those shifts have intensified dramatically over the past decade, particularly under Israel's current government.

The episode also focused heavily on Ben-Gvir's repeated visits to the Temple Mount, describing them as part of a broader effort to reshape policies that have governed the site since the Six-Day War in 1967.

Jewish worship activities including prayer, singing and bowing are becoming more visible as security policies evolve.

Another major topic involved proposals for building a synagogue on the Temple Mount.

The speakers described such a move as a major transitional development because it would establish a permanent Jewish worship presence directly on the site and create additional momentum toward a future temple structure.

The conversation also explored passages from the Book of Daniel, particularly Daniel 9:27 and Daniel 12:11, which reference sacrifices stopping midway through a future seven-year period.

According to the discussion, those passages point to a restored sacrificial system operating in Jerusalem during the end times.

The hosts also addressed growing discussion among Christians concerning support for rebuilding efforts connected to the Third Temple. Many Christians support the movement because of their commitment to Israel and biblical prophecy, even though we as Christians view Jesus Christ as the fulfillment of the sacrificial system established under the Mosaic covenant.

Throughout the episode, Gonzales and Hawkins framed the developments surrounding Jerusalem and the Temple Mount as major prophetic indicators deserving close attention.

The discussion also examined growing debate inside Christianity over literal and symbolic interpretations of end-times prophecy. The hosts argued that ongoing developments in Israel continue reinforcing futurist interpretations tied to Jerusalem, the Temple Mount and a future temple.

As religious and political tensions surrounding Jerusalem continue building, the Temple Mount remains one of the most closely watched locations in the world for both geopolitical and prophetic reasons.

How to Grow in Spiritual Discernment and Hear the Holy Spirit With Greater Clarity

Iran's regime has spent decades openly promising Israel's destruction. Now, as Tehran strengthens military alliances across the Middle East while threatening Israel's elimination by 2040, the prophetic framework described in Revelation is moving into place before the eyes of the world.

That question took center stage during a recent episode of Watchman Newscast LIVE, where Erick Stakelbeck examined renewed threats from Iran's leadership while pointing directly to the growing alignment described in Ezekiel 38 and the global rebellion outlined in Revelation.

"The Zionist entity as he calls it Israel will be gone," Stakelbeck said while discussing remarks from Mojtaba Khamenei. "It will no longer exist within 15 years. Translation by 2040 Israel will be gone."

The threat echoed years of declarations from Iran's leadership. Former Iranian Supreme Leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei repeatedly declared that Israel would disappear within 25 years, placing the regime's timeline squarely on 2040.

At the same time, the Middle East continues shifting toward the exact military alignment Ezekiel described thousands of years ago.

"You of course think of Ezekiel's war, the war of Gog and Magog," Stakelbeck said. "Persia that's ancient Iran modern day it's called Iran today it was called Persia 2,500 years ago when Ezekiel was writing about this."

Ezekiel 38 identifies Persia as part of a latter-days coalition that rises against Israel alongside territories connected to modern Turkey and Russia.

That alliance now exists in real time.

Iran and Russia continue strengthening military cooperation. Turkey continues expanding its influence throughout the Middle East under President Recep Tayyip Erdogan. Turkish military forces remain embedded throughout northern Syria, placing another major regional power directly on Israel's border.

The pieces of the Ezekiel war are positioning themselves exactly where Scripture said they would.

At the same time, Revelation describes the broader spiritual and geopolitical atmosphere surrounding those events. Revelation 16 describes nations gathering for war as the world moves toward Armageddon. Revelation 13 describes a centralized global system hostile toward God and biblical truth. Revelation 17 depicts political and spiritual powers uniting in rebellion against God's order.

That rebellion already dominates the modern world.

Iran openly calls for Israel's destruction. Hezbollah launches attacks from Lebanon. Hamas remains committed to Israel's elimination. Anti-Semitism surges globally. Governments, activist movements and global institutions increasingly unite around hostility toward Israel and biblical morality.

Meanwhile, the military map surrounding Israel grows more dangerous by the year.

"They literally surrounded Israel on every side with a proxy network," Stakelbeck said. "They armed it to the teeth with rockets and drones and missiles.”

Iran’s “ring of fire” strategy placed Hezbollah in Lebanon, Hamas in Gaza, the Houthis in Yemen and allied militias across Syria and Iraq around Israel’s borders. Turkey’s growing military footprint inside Syria adds another major factor to the rapidly escalating prophetic picture.

The result is the most prophetically charged Middle East landscape in modern history.

Revelation places Jerusalem at the center of humanity’s final rebellion against God before the return of Jesus Christ. The nations rage against God’s covenant purposes. Deception spreads across the earth. Hostility toward biblical truth intensifies. Global instability accelerates.

Those conditions now dominate headlines daily.

“Nothing has changed,” Stakelbeck said about Iran’s regime. “Their ideology remains exactly the same. It’s an evil ideology. And when it’s evil, that means it’s going to be relentless unless it’s crushed.”

Those tensions continue escalating militarily.

Israel intensified operations against Hezbollah in Lebanon following repeated drone attacks targeting Israeli soldiers and northern Israeli communities.

According to Stakelbeck, the Israel Defense Forces struck more than 150 Hezbollah targets in Lebanon in a single day while continuing deeper operations against terror infrastructure in southern Lebanon.

All the while, Iran continues publicly insisting Israel will cease to exist by 2040.

That declaration raises an unavoidable prophetic question: If Iran intends to fulfill that vision within the next 14 years, will the Ezekiel 38 war erupt before then?

The direction of world events points toward Revelation's final prophetic landscape with stunning precision.

Revelation does not describe a world moving toward peace. It describes escalating war, deception, rebellion and nations gathering against God before Christ returns to establish His kingdom.

Iran's threats against Israel are not isolated political rhetoric. They are part of the growing global rebellion Revelation warned would emerge in the last days.

Still, Scripture leaves no doubt about the final outcome.

Iran's leaders may promise Israel's destruction, but Revelation declares that Jesus Christ will rule the nations. The rebellion of the world will collapse. Evil will be judged. God's kingdom will prevail forever.

Until then, the prophetic chessboard continues moving exactly where Scripture said it would.
