

Angelic Order Revealed: Exploring Heaven's Hierarchy

Something changed in President Donald Trump on that fateful day in Butler, Pennsylvania.

The attempt on his life did more than shake the political world—it deepened his faith in God.

“I believed in God, but I feel much more strongly about it now. Something happened,” he said. It was a moment of clarity, the kind that turns a man’s heart towards God. And Trump isn’t just talking about his faith—he’s acting on it. He has signed an executive order establishing a faith office, ensuring that religious liberty remains a priority in his administration. More than that, he’s standing against the growing anti-Christian bias in America.

That bias has never been clearer. Pro-life advocates are arrested, homeschooling families are scrutinized and parents who push back against radical policies find themselves targeted. But Trump’s renewed faith reminds us of something essential—this country was built on the faith of its leaders. Before him, many presidents openly embraced their belief in God, and their leadership was shaped by it.

Faithful Presidents Who Came Before Trump

- George Washington – In his farewell address, he warned that religion and morality were “indispensable supports” to America’s success. He knew that without God, the nation would falter.
- John Adams – Declared that the Constitution was made “only for a moral and religious people” and would not work for any other.
- Thomas Jefferson – Though often misrepresented as a secularist, he attended church services in the U.S. Capitol and said, “God who gave us life gave us liberty.”
- Abraham Lincoln – Instituted “In God We Trust” on U.S. currency and frequently referenced divine providence in his speeches, believing that America’s survival depended on faith.
- Ulysses S. Grant – Called for “acknowledging dependence upon Almighty God” in his presidential proclamations.
- Teddy Roosevelt – Spoke openly about his Christian faith, regularly attended church, and saw religion as the moral compass of the nation.
- Franklin D. Roosevelt – Distributed Gideon’s New Testaments to millions of World War II soldiers, ensuring they carried the Word of God into battle.
- Harry Truman – Established the National Day of Prayer as an annual event, reinforcing America’s reliance on God.
- Dwight Eisenhower – Added “under God” to the Pledge of Allegiance and included a prayer in his inaugural address.
- John F. Kennedy – Declared that “the rights of man come not from the generosity of the state but from the hand of God.”
- Ronald Reagan – A champion of pro-life values, he compared the fight against abortion to Lincoln’s fight against slavery, arguing that a nation cannot stand if it denies life to the unborn.

- George H.W. Bush – Opened his presidency with prayer and continued to speak about the necessity of faith in public life.
- Jimmy Carter – Often quoted Micah 6:8: “What does the Lord require of thee but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?”

From Washington to Trump, the message has remained the same—faith is not an afterthought; it is the foundation of the nation. Those who attempt to erase Christianity from public life are attacking the very pillars that hold America together.

Through the Prophetic Lens: Unveiling the End Times

The political landscape has shifted, and with it, a renewed sense of anticipation among those watching biblical prophecy unfold. With Donald Trump back in office, speculation surrounding the rebuilding of the third temple in Jerusalem has surged, fueled by statements from Israeli leaders and religious groups.

Lauren Caron of Certainty4UncertainTimes opened the discussion by noting Trump's long-standing support for Israel and the potential role his administration could play. "He has a lot of people that are in his administration as well that seem to be very supportive of the Jews wanting to be able to rebuild their Temple too," she said. This, she suggests, could mark a major turning point in efforts that have been on hold for years.

Mondo Gonzales of Prophecy Watchers expanded on this, emphasizing the political maneuvering behind the scenes. "Netanyahu is looking ... he recognizes and he always has the existential threat of being surrounded by either Hezbollah or Hamas," he said, explaining how Israel's security concerns have delayed progress.

One of the biggest developments involves the red heifer purification ceremony, an essential step toward restoring temple worship. "The ceremony ... was supposed to happen in the Passover to Pentecost window of 2024," Gonzales explained. However, due to the Oct. 7 Hamas attacks and tensions with the Biden administration, plans were put on hold.

But things have changed. With Trump in office, Israeli rabbis are suddenly hopeful. "With Trump now in, the rabbis ... are living on cloud nine in believing that this could be the year," Gonzales noted. The momentum is back, and with major Jewish festivals on the horizon, many believe the red heifer ceremony could happen sooner rather than later.

One of the key factors in the urgency? The red heifers themselves. “The longer they wait, the longer there’s a potential for the three remaining red heifers to become disqualified,” Gonzales pointed out. As they age, even a single gray hair could render them unusable for the purification rites.

Adding another layer to this unfolding story is Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu’s personal conviction. According to Gonzales, Robert Mawire revealed that “Netanyahu told [him] privately ... ‘I feel that God has called me to be the prime minister who helps rebuild the third temple.’” Whether a true divine calling or a political calculation, his statement raises eyebrows—and expectations.

Ezekiel 38 and the Road to War: What's Leading Us There?

We must ask ourselves: Have we ignored the warning signs?

Decades ago, Bible teacher Derek Prince warned of the dangers of seeking supernatural knowledge outside of God. Today, his words ring truer than ever as the occult infiltrates mainstream culture, from Taylor Swift's music laced with dark spiritual themes to Blizzard Entertainment's 'Diablo IV' online gaming community normalizing demonic imagery, and Hocus Pocus teaching young audiences that witchcraft is harmless fun. The enemy is no longer hiding in the shadows—he is flaunting his influence in broad daylight.

Prince made one thing clear: “Almost any form of supernatural knowledge is very, very dangerous.” He emphasized that there are only two sources of supernatural power—God or Satan. “If it doesn't come from God, it does come from the devil.” Yet, today's culture encourages people, particularly young audiences, to explore the dark arts. From Ouija boards to tarot cards, these practices are no longer just lurking in obscure corners of occult bookstores; they are sold in mainstream retailers, promoted on social media and glamorized in entertainment.

We see evidence of this in music, movies and video games with companies and artists incorporating occultic imagery and lyrics that openly reference summoning spirits. Taylor Swift's “Willow” music video, for instance, showcases ritualistic imagery that mirrors actual pagan, aka demonic, practices. Prince warned of this deception, explaining that many unknowingly tie themselves to false gods through supernatural pursuits: “If we get into any other supernatural realm of visions or revelations or knowledge or prediction, and we didn't go by Jesus Christ, we got into the realm of evil and of Satan.”

Prince also noted how the occult often follows generational lines, passing through family bloodlines: "A grandmother who's a fortune-teller or a clairvoyant is liable to have one favorite grandchild... that favorite grandchild will be the recipient of that evil supernatural power." This warning should make parents and grandparents take notice—what spiritual doors are being opened in their children's lives through exposure to modern occultic trends?

As Prince rightly stated, "We need to repent, we need to revoke the claim that they have over us, and we need to loose ourselves from their dark evil influence."
