

Jonathan Cahn's Prophetic Message to President Joe Biden

As American culture delves deeper into the grip of Satan, Christian leaders are needed more than ever.

The leadership of this nation has turned away from God and Rabbi Jonathan Cahn has an important message for those leaders in hopes that they will repent and turn from their evil ways.

As Rabbi Cahn outs the apostasy that has been brought about in America, Christians everywhere must stand up and speak out against the unbiblical policies infecting America today. They are called to prayer for the leaders of America, that they may repent and turn from the path the country is currently on.

Listen as Rabbi Cahn sheds light on the dangers, hypocrisy and lies spread by the current administration, and the potential ramifications that are still to come. {eoa}

Transforming America: Fellowship of Christian

Athletes Puts Faith Into Action

Read time: 3 minutes 39 seconds

Satan knew that if he could influence America's youth, he could transform the country into something barely resembling the God-fearing nation it started out as.

He knew that if children grew up separated from God, they would be easier to teach the ways of the world and view biblical principles as outdated and irrelevant.

Groups like the Fellowship of Christian Athletes have made it their mission to stem the tide of secularism deceiving the youth today.

FCA, celebrating their 68 years of ministry to young athletes, reports that they will have handed out nearly 200,000 Bibles in 2022.

Each year, FCA has a theme and 2022's was "Every." The Scripture used in conjunction with the theme is Ephesians 1:3 saying: "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who has blessed us with every spiritual blessing in the heavenly places in Christ."

Teaching young people in America to be grateful is a necessity in a 'me-focused' society. But FCA goes a step further and teaches them to be grateful to the source of their blessings as well, Jesus Christ.

As FCA continues to make an impact in the sporting world, one of the most popular venues in American society, they provide a clarion call for Christians in every aspect of American society to do the same.

While some Christians shy away from getting involved in areas such as politics, FCA shows that to make a difference in the world, Christians must take part in the world.

Athletes have incredible influence in the world today. Most recently the World Cup was viewed by over a billion people across the planet, and sports in America are no different.

The Super Bowl, NBA Finals, World Series and Stanley Cup all pull in hundreds of millions of views across the world. What could be more impactful than an athlete who was disciplined by FCA to acknowledge and thank Jesus for all good things holding up those trophies? Media will always ask for a comment and what is more appropriate than giving thanks to Jesus Christ in front of those millions?

The cultural impact is not limited to sports either, and more Christians need to get involved across the world.

Christian actors are trying to make biblical content, and with the success of media like "The Passion of the Christ" and "The Chosen," there is a need for Christian producers, directors, writers, actors and marketers to bring biblical stories to the world.

Perhaps the most important area that Christians are needed in is the political arena.

The world is seeing what happens when politicians who are not just secular but anti-God can do. Freedoms such as religion, speech and press are restricted. Laws that celebrate the murder of babies and mutilation of children are passed. Marriage is desecrated and the State becomes the replacement for God.

There must be action on the part of the Christians across the world, in obedience to James 2:14-26. Faith must be put into action to have an impact. Whether that action is at the voting booth, running for office or volunteering for candidates that stand for Godly, biblical values, work is needed to bring God back into the fold in American politics.

As Christian political strategist Terri Hasdorff explains in her book, "Running Into the Fire," Christians not only can, but are needed to make a godly impact in the halls of Congress. Hasdorff explains in detail how an average, ordinary citizen can impact their community and country for the Lord. It can be a difficult and trying process, but nothing is impossible for God.

When the message of the gospel is sent out across the land, hearts will hear it and lives will change. If no one is acting to spread the message outside of a church building on Sunday morning, what chance do those who do not know Jesus Christ have?

With more organizations like the Fellowship of Christian Athletes taking the Word to the world, repentance can occur within the hearts of citizens across the country. With a repentant, receptive heart for the Lord, the revival that Christians have been praying and hoping for so long can sweep across the nation bringing God's glory front and center.

Donald Trump and the Lesson of King Saul

Read time: 6 minutes 21 seconds

It has become apparent to all outside of the most loyal of Trump supporters, that the former president is undergoing a season of decline.

The choices he makes during this season may very well determine not only his future, but his legacy as well.

If Trump has any hope of a turnaround from his current situation, he would do well to heed the lessons taught by Israel's first king, Saul.

Saul was chosen by God and anointed by Samuel. He was picked to carry out the will of the Lord as he led God's people. He was to be the ultimate example of a godly man in a position of power.

Unfortunately, Saul did not live up to the calling.

Before Saul was even king, he hid from Samuel at his own coronation, putting on hold the will of the Lord.

Many within the evangelical circle believe that God chose Donald Trump as well. And there are many reasons for them to believe that. His conservative and pro-America policies were unexpected and welcome, as was the relationship he forged with Israel. Say what you will about Trump, the Bible says all authority is granted by the Lord, and to not honor the authority granted to those in leadership is to go against the Word of the Lord. It is not a far-fetched statement to say that Donald Trump may well have been the most pro-Israel president in the history of America.

When Saul was finally anointed king, there was a remainder who did not acknowledge his authority. They instead insulted him in a way that called for death. But after his victory over the Philistines, against the will of his supporters, Saul spared the lives of those who had spoken out against his kingship. What Saul may not have thought of was by speaking against his appointment, they were also speaking against God.

Upon the election of Donald Trump, not only was the left thrown into what is now known as “Trump Derangement Syndrome” (TDS), but there were splinter groups of so-called Republicans, some of whom later formed the Lincoln Project, who made it their sole purpose to destroy Donald Trump.

During Saul’s reign, he developed a lack of patience. Being king got to his head, and he believed that he was not beholden to anyone but himself. This led to his disobeying the commandment of the Lord to wait for Samuel to offer a sacrifice to the Lord. It was upon this event that the kingship was stripped from him, a man once chosen by God to lead His people. Instead of repenting and begging the Lord for forgiveness, Saul continued in his war against the Philistines.

It is a fair statement—perhaps an understatement—to say that Donald Trump also values his own advice over others. Neither Trump nor Saul were stupid men, but hubris can allow even an intelligent man to act foolishly, and even worse, disobey the Lord. Few can say what happened behind closed doors during the Trump presidency, but when his favor began to fall, Christians with discernment know that it was time to repent and get back on the path the Lord set him on.

When Saul failed to kill King Agag of the Amalekites and took for himself the spoils of their land, he finally broke the last straw of the Lord’s grace and was rejected by God. Samuel clued Saul into an important secret: the Lord desires obedience above all else. All Saul had to do was obey the Word of the Lord and his reign would have been a very different experience.

Donald Trump had a wealth of success when it came to his policies. Any objective observer will acknowledge that, but with hindsight being 20/20, few will argue that the decision to rush a vaccine and lock down the country has had ramifications that will be felt for years to come.

Nor would any objective person say that the election of 2020 was a fair one either. With Elon Musk's takeover of Twitter, it was confirmed that Donald Trump was right all along: he and his supporters, along with others who questioned the Leftist narrative, were silenced by Big Tech companies on social media platforms. But the result remained the same, Donald Trump left office. Whether this was an act allowed by God, or a victory of the devil against the Lord's chosen is open for debate. But considering how Trump has acted in the time since he left office, it can also be argued that his heart is not in the right place. His unwarranted attack on his biggest rival within the Republican party, Ron DeSantis, showed that.

Saul developed erratic behavior throughout his reign as he was tormented by spirits. This is what happens when leadership is not protected by the Lord. The rooms in his heart were taken over by the devil and only the sound of David's anointed music could bring peace to him for a short time. As Saul was overtaken by jealousy, pride and rebellion, he suffered defeat at the hand of Israel's enemy. It was David who was elevated over him and slew the giant, the same David that Saul would hunt down and try to kill. Saul did this out of fear and because he knew that God was with David and not with him.

As Saul's reign began getting closer to the end he committed atrocities against the Lord, such as killing the priests of the Lord at Nob. Why? Because they gave David, chosen of the Lord, provisions. Saul would even commit a crime that the Lord considers an abomination: he consulted a medium to summon the spirit of Samuel to give him guidance. Eventually, Saul would be slain by his own sword, and become a tragic lesson for all leaders to heed.

President Donald Trump has not crossed the threshold that Saul crossed, yet. Christians should pray that he never does. Trump's behavior has become more erratic in recent days, most recently teasing a "big announcement" that turned out to be a self-absorbed digital trading card collection. He is currently trailing both Ron DeSantis and Joe Biden in potential matchups, and his support among his strongest base, evangelical Christians, has waned since 2016. Whatever may be in his heart, perhaps bitterness from unrelenting attacks his entire presidency and a level of disrespect shown to him by his political rivals never before seen in American politics, or perhaps pride in all his accomplishments that made him a billionaire and president of the mightiest country in the history of the world, there must be a change.

If Donald Trump could find the humility to prostrate himself before the Lord and repent for whatever may be in his heart and turn back to the Lord who blessed him as president, he could forge a legacy few have achieved. He could become a great unifier, and use his powerful influence to support biblical values, ideals and candidates.

The choice is his. Christians are called to lift him up in prayer and pray that he does not suffer a spiritual fate as that of King Saul.
