

Mystery Deepens After 11th Scientist Death Linked to UFO and Anti-Gravity Research

A growing pattern of deaths among scientists tied to advanced aerospace and energy research is raising serious concerns after the mysterious death of anti-gravity researcher Amy Eskridge.

According to a recent Daily Mail report, Eskridge, 34, was found dead in Huntsville, Alabama, on June 11, 2022, from what was officially described as a self-inflicted gunshot wound. No detailed findings from law enforcement or medical examiners have been publicly released, leaving lingering questions about the circumstances surrounding her death.

Before her death, Eskridge had been working on anti-gravity propulsion, a field with the potential to transform space travel and energy systems. She had also warned publicly that her life was in danger as she pushed forward with plans to disclose her research.

“I need to disclose soon, man. I need to publish soon because it’s like escalating. It’s getting more and more aggressive,” Eskridge said in a 2020 podcast. “Over the past 12 months, it’s been escalating, like more aggressive, more invasive digging through my underwear drawer and sexual threats.”

Eskridge co-founded the Institute for Exotic Science with her father, retired NASA engineer Richard Eskridge, to bring transparency to anti-gravity research. She explained the purpose clearly: “If you stick your neck out in public, at least someone notices if your head gets chopped off.”

Since her death, her institute has shut down, and its online presence has disappeared.

Retired British intelligence officer Franc Milburn, who investigated Eskridge's claims of harassment, concluded her death was not a suicide. He documented repeated incidents of intimidation, including alleged attacks involving a "directed energy weapon."

"Somebody was after her work," Milburn said. "One, trying to get her to desist from doing the work, and two... to actually stop her, to debilitate her so she was unable to do the work."

Those findings were later submitted to Congress by independent investigators in 2023.

Journalist Michael Shellenberger also testified before a public hearing on Unidentified Anomalous Phenomena that Eskridge was "murdered by a 'private aerospace company' in the U.S. because she was involved in the UAP conversation."

Eskridge's case does not stand alone.

Her death is now being cited as part of a troubling pattern involving at least 10 other scientists and researchers connected to space exploration, nuclear technology, and advanced propulsion systems who have either died suddenly or disappeared under unclear circumstances in recent years.

Since 2022 alone, at least five additional researchers have died, including two who were murdered in their own homes. Others tied to sensitive research fields have reportedly vanished without clear explanations.

While officials have not confirmed any direct connection between these cases, the clustering of deaths among individuals working in highly specialized and often classified areas has fueled growing concern among national security observers and independent investigators.

The U.S. government has repeatedly denied the existence of alien technology or secret anti-gravity programs. However, Eskridge herself claimed her work was part of a broader push toward public disclosure of advanced technologies long discussed in connection with UFO and UAP research.

For years, Christian author and researcher L.A. Marzulli has warned that these kinds of cases point to something far deeper than isolated incidents. Marzulli states that advanced propulsion, UFO encounters and the sudden silencing of key voices all connect to a growing global deception rooted in the supernatural. He has repeatedly argued that what is unfolding is not just technological but spiritual, echoing the days of Noah when fallen knowledge and non-human influence shaped human history.

The pattern of intimidation, suppression and death surrounding cutting-edge research signals that the truth behind these phenomena is being actively hidden as the world moves closer to full disclosure.

James Lasher, a seasoned writer and editor at Charisma Media, combines faith and storytelling with a journalism background from Otterbein University and ministry experience in Guatemala and at the LA Dream Center. A Marine Corps and Air Force veteran, he is the author of The Revelation of Jesus: A Common Man's Commentary and a contributor to Charisma magazine. For interviews and media inquiries, please contact media@.

Trump Border Czar Tom Homan Fires Back at Pope Leo as Immigration Clash Escalates

A growing clash between the White House and the Vatican is intensifying as border czar Tom Homan pushes back against criticism from Pope Leo XIV over immigration and global policy.

Speaking outside the White House, Homan said he is ready to engage directly with Vatican leadership. "I welcome discussion with any of them," he said. But he made his position clear, adding, "I wish they'd stay out of immigration, they don't know what they're talking about."

Homan, a lifelong Catholic, pointed to the human cost of illegal immigration. "Illegal immigration is not a victimless crime," he said. He described firsthand scenes from the border, including "a 9-year-old girl that got raped multiple times" and standing "in the back of a tractor trailer with 19 dead aliens at my feet, including a 5-year-old boy that baked to death." He said those realities shape his view and would change minds if others experienced them.

He also defended Donald Trump and his border policies. "He's saving thousands of lives a year because he has a secure border," Homan said. "Where President Trump had the most secure border in the lifetime of this nation, right now, lives are being saved." He added that enforcement has crippled criminal networks, saying, "Human traffickers are out of business. The cartels are going bankrupt because of that secure border."

Order Troy Anderson's New Book, "Designated Disrupter" on !

Pope Leo has taken a different tone. He said, "I think every country has a right to determine who and how and when people enter," but raised concerns about how enforcement is carried out. "When people are living good lives, and many of them for 10, 15, 20 years, to treat them in a way that is extremely disrespectful, to say the least, and there's been some violence, unfortunately," he said, urging Americans to listen to church leaders.

The disagreement has spilled into sharp public criticism. Trump wrote that "Pope Leo is WEAK on Crime, and terrible for Foreign Policy," and called on him to "get his act together as Pope" and "focus on being a Great Pope, not a Politician."

Trump also addressed the pope's stance on global threats, telling reporters, "We don't like a pope that's going to say that it's OK to have a nuclear weapon." He added, "We don't want a pope that says crime is OK in our cities. I don't like it. I'm not a big fan of Pope Leo."

Pope Leo responded with a steady tone. "I have no fear of the Trump administration," he said. "The things that I say are certainly not meant as attacks on anyone." He pointed to a broader mission, saying, "I will continue to speak out loudly against war, looking to promote peace, promoting dialogue and multilateral relationships among the states to look for just solutions to problems." He added, "Too many people are suffering in the world today. Too many innocent people are being killed. And I think someone has to stand up and say there's a better way."

Vice President JD Vance struck a more measured tone. "In some cases, it would be best for the Vatican to stick to matters of morality and let the president of the United States stick to dictating American public policy," he said. At the same time, he dismissed the tension as manageable, noting, "We certainly have a good relationship with the Vatican, but we're also going to disagree on substantive questions from time to time."

I think that's a totally reasonable thing."

The back-and-forth highlights a widening divide over immigration and only appears to be getting worse by the day. Let us join together in prayer that there be a moment of reconciliation between the White House and the Vatican.

James Lasher, a seasoned writer and editor at Charisma Media, combines faith and storytelling with a journalism background from Otterbein University and ministry experience in Guatemala and at the LA Dream Center. A Marine Corps and Air Force veteran, he is the author of The Revelation of Jesus: A Common Man's Commentary and a contributor to Charisma magazine. For interviews and media inquiries, please contact media@.

Jack Hibbs Breaks Down Angels, Fallen Angels and Demons in Eye-Opening Teaching

Investigators say the situation escalated quickly. During a verbal altercation, the young woman attempted to flee. "Shots were fired, and at least one round struck her in the shoulder as she attempted to leave the scene in her vehicle," authorities said.

She was rushed to a hospital where she underwent emergency surgery.

Authorities revealed that Marin had a prior connection to the church. He “had recently been asked to stop attending the church about a month ago, after his demeanor was deemed ‘unacceptable,’” officials said. All three individuals involved had attended the same church in recent weeks, raising serious concerns about how this situation escalated to violence.

In a dramatic turn, the victim’s boyfriend witnessed the shooting and acted immediately. After the shots were fired, he “ran over the suspect in a reported attempt to defend his partner and disarm the suspect,” according to law enforcement.

Order Your Copy of the Spiritual Warfare Bible on Today!

Marin was treated for his injuries and later taken into custody. He now faces charges including aggravated assault with a deadly weapon and burglary of a habitation with intent to commit a felony.

Authorities initially mentioned possible stalking behavior but later clarified there is “no documented history of prior stalking calls or restraining orders connected to the case.” The investigation remains ongoing as detectives continue to piece together the events leading up to the shooting.

This tragic incident is a sobering reminder that violence can strike even in places connected to worship and community. The church is called to stand in the gap during moments like these.

Now is the time to pray for the young woman’s full recovery, for comfort and strength for her family, and for justice to be carried out. Pray also for protection over churches and communities, that God’s peace would guard every heart and every home.

James Lasher, a seasoned writer and editor at Charisma Media, combines faith and storytelling with a journalism background from Otterbein University and ministry experience in Guatemala and at the LA Dream Center. A Marine Corps and Air Force veteran, he is the author of The Revelation of Jesus: A Common Man's Commentary and a contributor to Charisma magazine. For interviews and media inquiries, please contact media@.

Why the Old Testament Ends With a Curse And How Jesus Breaks It