

Massive Saharan Dust Cloud Headed for US, Bringing Air Quality Warnings and Extreme Heat

Residents across parts of Florida are being warned to prepare for hazy skies and declining air quality as a wave of dust from North Africa spreads across the region.

Forecasters say the airborne dust, carried thousands of miles across the Atlantic Ocean, is expected to become increasingly noticeable through the week. The phenomenon is bringing drier air into the Southeast, limiting thunderstorm development and adding to already oppressive heat conditions.

Cooperative Institute for Meteorological Satellite Studies / University of Wisconsin-Madison

Miami-Dade County officials issued an Air Quality Alert this week as concentrations of fine particulate matter increased across portions of South Florida.

Officials warned that pollutant levels could approach or exceed thresholds considered unhealthy for some individuals, particularly those with respiratory conditions.

The dust contains microscopic particles that can travel deep into the respiratory system. According to the report, Saharan dust contains “fine particles, PM10 and especially PM2.5, minerals like quartz and feldspar, and sometimes microbes or pollutants picked up during transport.”

Health experts caution that exposure can contribute to breathing difficulties, cardiovascular stress and irritation of the eyes, nose and throat. Headaches, fatigue and allergic reactions have also been associated with elevated dust levels.

Order Jonathan Cahn's New Book, "The Altar of Pergamon" on !

The arrival of the dust coincides with a stretch of dangerous summer heat. Meteorologists expect temperatures to remain in the mid-90s across parts of Florida, with heat index values potentially climbing as high as 110 degrees.

Despite the health concerns, the dust does provide one benefit during hurricane season.

The dry air associated with Saharan dust can interfere with tropical development by reducing the moisture needed for storms to organize and strengthen. Forecasters say that process may help limit tropical activity across portions of the Atlantic in the short term.

"The greatest impacts of the Sahara dust are forecast from the middle of the week into the weekend as high pressure builds and additional dust arrives from the Atlantic," the report stated.

Saharan dust outbreaks are a regular summertime occurrence, particularly between June and August. Atmospheric wind patterns routinely carry dust from the Sahara Desert westward across the Atlantic, with some plumes traveling more than 5,000 miles before reaching the Caribbean, Gulf Coast and southeastern United States.

Forecasters expect conditions to gradually improve once additional moisture returns to the region later this week.

James Lasher, a seasoned writer and editor at Charisma Media, combines faith and storytelling with a journalism background from Otterbein University and ministry experience in Guatemala and at the LA Dream Center. A Marine Corps and Air Force veteran, he is the author of The Revelation of Jesus: A Common Man's Commentary and a contributor to Charisma magazine. For interviews and media inquiries, please contact media@.

From Orwell to Revelation: Are Police Drones a Glimpse of the Infrastructure Behind the Beast System?

When George Orwell wrote Nineteen Eighty-Four in 1949, the idea of authorities monitoring citizens with near-constant awareness seemed like dystopian fiction.

Today, police departments across America are deploying drones that can fly into homes, track suspects, locate individuals before officers arrive and, in at least one California case, physically remove a weapon from a suspect's hand.

Officials hailed the incident as a "nationwide first."

The miracle that helped propel Jesus' ministry into the national spotlight still carries a message for believers today.

In a recent teaching from John 12, Rabbi Kirt Schneider pointed to the raising of Lazarus as evidence that God continues to work supernaturally and that miracles remain a powerful witness to the truth of the Gospel.

"The people were coming because they were hearing what He did," Schneider said.

As Jesus entered Jerusalem before His crucifixion, many in the crowd had witnessed or heard about Lazarus being raised from the dead.

"They wanted to see this prophet that had raised somebody from the dead," Schneider said.

Signs and Wonders Follow the Gospel

Schneider said the growth of the early church was connected not only to preaching but also to God's supernatural power.

"The Gospel of the Kingdom spread in the first-century church, and the Gospel of the Kingdom continues to be spread today when the Word of God and the Word of the Kingdom of Heaven is proclaimed, followed by signs and wonders," he said.

He pointed to Jesus' earthly ministry as the model.

"Everywhere Jesus went, He did three things: He preached the Gospel. He preached the Word. He healed the sick. He did miracles, and He performed healings and signs and wonders."

According to Schneider, that pattern has not changed.

“The same way that the church began with the Word being preached and then it being confirmed with signs and wonders, this is the way the Gospel is still penetrating the earth today,” he said.

Order Rabbi Kirt Schneider's New Book, "The Mystery of the Tabernacle" on !

When God Confirmed the Message

Schneider recounted the story of missionaries who spent years preaching in India with little response before discovering teachings on healing and miracles.

After returning with renewed faith in God's supernatural power, the results were dramatically different.

“They began to declare healing over people,” Schneider said.

“People started getting healed. Signs and wonders and miracles took place.”

“From there, the Gospel exploded in India,” he said.

God Is Still a Miracle Worker

At the heart of Schneider's message was a simple truth about God's nature.

“God by nature is a miracle worker,” he said.

“By nature, the God that you have a relationship with is supernatural.”

Schneider pointed to the miracles recorded throughout Scripture as evidence that believers should continue to expect God to move today.

“All these miracles are what cause people to wake up and look up and pay attention,” he said.

Don't Be Trapped in the Natural World

Schneider concluded by encouraging believers facing difficult circumstances to keep their eyes on God's power rather than their limitations.

“Don't be trapped in the natural world,” he said.

“There are answers for you and I beyond the natural world.”

He urged Christians to trust God for healing, deliverance and breakthrough.

“Believe God, beloved, to work wonders in your life,” Schneider said.

The lesson of Lazarus remains just as relevant now as it was 2,000 years ago.

“The same One that Jesus bore witness to, His Father, that was doing the miracles through Him, He's at work in your life,” he said.

James Lasher, a seasoned writer and editor at Charisma Media, combines faith and storytelling with a journalism background from Otterbein University and ministry experience in Guatemala and at the LA Dream Center. A Marine Corps and Air Force veteran, he is the author of The Revelation of Jesus: A Common Man's Commentary and a contributor to Charisma magazine. For interviews and media inquiries, please contact media@.

Ancient Roman Records Confirm What Christians Have Proclaimed for 2,000 Years

For nearly 2,000 years, Christians have declared a simple truth: Jesus Christ is not a myth, legend or literary invention. He is the Son of God, the Word made flesh.

Now, as secular scholars continue examining ancient sources outside the Bible, renewed attention is being given to historical records that affirm the existence of Jesus from writers who were not Christians and had no interest in advancing the Gospel.

According to a recent review published by the Biblical Archaeology Society, the writings of the Roman historian Tacitus and the Jewish historian Flavius Josephus remain among the strongest non-Christian references to Jesus in the ancient world.

The report noted that “most historians already accept that Jesus was a real historical figure, with debate focusing less on whether he existed and more on the details of his life and teachings.”

That conclusion is not surprising. The Gospel accounts have always stood as eyewitness testimony to the life, death and resurrection of Jesus Christ. What continues to draw attention is the fact that secular historians repeatedly arrive at the same foundational conclusion: Jesus was a real person who lived in first-century Judea and whose impact changed the world.

Order Dinesh D'Souza's New Book, "The Stones Cry Out" on !

A Roman Historian's Testimony

One of the most significant references comes from Tacitus, one of Rome's most respected historians.

Writing around A.D. 116 in his work Annals, Tacitus described Emperor Nero's persecution of Christians after the Great Fire of Rome. In doing so, he referred to "Christus," stating that He was executed during the reign of Emperor Tiberius by Pontius Pilate, the Roman governor of Judea.

The report emphasized that Tacitus was not sympathetic to Christianity.

"Far from promoting their beliefs, he described Christianity as a dangerous superstition and expressed contempt for its followers."

That hostility is precisely why historians regard the reference as important. Tacitus had no motive to support Christian claims. Yet his account confirms that Jesus was executed under Roman authority and that His followers continued spreading His teachings after His death.

Josephus Provides Another Independent Witness

A second major source comes from Josephus, a Jewish historian born only a few years after Jesus' crucifixion.

In Jewish Antiquities, Josephus referred to James as "the brother of Jesus-who-is-called-Messiah."

A Daily Mail article noted that the reference appears naturally within a discussion about James.

“Jesus is not the focus of the passage, but is mentioned only to identify another person.”

Historians view that detail as significant because Josephus wrote as though his readers already knew who Jesus was.

Josephus also included a longer passage describing Jesus as a wise teacher who attracted followers. While scholars continue debating portions of that section, the report stated that “the majority still conclude that the passage was based on an original reference to Jesus written by Josephus himself.”

The Historical Record Points to Jesus

Taken together, the writings of Tacitus and Josephus affirm several key facts. Jesus lived in Judea. He gathered followers. He was executed under Pontius Pilate. His followers continued proclaiming His message after His death. The Christian movement spread rapidly throughout the Roman Empire.

The report also highlighted a remarkable reality about the ancient world.

According to the historical record, opponents of Christianity accused Jesus of “false teaching, deception and even sorcery.”

Yet one charge is notably absent.

“Virtually none argued that he was entirely fictional.”

That reality remains true today. Serious historical scholarship no longer centers on whether Jesus existed. The evidence is overwhelming.

These records do not create faith. Our faith rests in Jesus Christ, the truth of Scripture and the power of His resurrection.

These ancient sources demonstrate that the historical record continues to align with what believers have proclaimed from the beginning. Long before modern historians debated the evidence, the church was declaring the truth that still transforms lives today:

Jesus Christ entered human history, died for our sins, rose again and reigns as Lord.

*James Lasher, a seasoned writer and editor at Charisma Media, combines faith and storytelling with a journalism background from Otterbein University and ministry experience in Guatemala and at the LA Dream Center. A Marine Corps and Air Force veteran, he is the author of The Revelation of Jesus: A Common Man's Commentary and a contributor to Charisma magazine. For interviews and media inquiries, please contact media@.*

JD Vance's Warning to Israel Echoes a Prophetic Reality the World Can No Longer Ignore

Vice President J.D. Vance made headlines last week with a stark warning to Israeli leaders and critics of the Trump administration's Iran agreement. But beyond the political controversy lies a deeper reality that Bible-believing Christians should not overlook.

Defending President Donald Trump's approach to Iran, Vance delivered one of the most striking assessments of Israel's international standing heard from a senior American official in years.

"Donald J. Trump is the only head of state in the entire world who is sympathetic to the nation of Israel at this moment in time," Vance said.

He followed that with another remarkable statement:

"If I was in the cabinet of the Israeli government, I might not be attacking the only powerful ally that I have anywhere left in the entire world."

Whether one agrees with Vance's political conclusions or not, his comments highlight something that should command our attention.

Just weeks earlier, President Trump himself was reported to have delivered a blunt message to Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu during a heated phone call over Israel's military operations.

According to Axios, citing officials familiar with the conversation, Trump warned Netanyahu that "Everybody hates Israel because of this."

Reuters later confirmed the call took place and that Trump acknowledged rebuking Netanyahu, though the White House did not independently verify every reported word of the exchange.

Trump also confirmed that he called Netanyahu "crazy" during the conversation, reflecting growing frustration over the conflict.

These developments are impossible to ignore.

Order Jonathan Cahn's New Book, "The Altar of Pergamon" on !

The Bible repeatedly describes a future in which Israel becomes increasingly isolated among the nations. The prophet Zechariah wrote of a day when "all nations of the earth" would gather against Jerusalem. Ezekiel describes a future coalition assembling against Israel. The book of Revelation portrays mounting global hostility toward God's purposes and His covenant people.

No serious observer can deny that Israel's standing has deteriorated dramatically since the Oct. 7 attacks.

Israel's war against Hamas has drawn relentless criticism. Its campaign against Hezbollah has generated international condemnation. Military actions against Iran have sparked diplomatic backlash. University campuses across the West have erupted in anti-Israel demonstrations. International organizations have intensified scrutiny. Politicians throughout Europe and North America are increasingly distancing themselves from Jerusalem.

Every military action is examined. Every strike is condemned. Every decision is debated on a global stage.

That does not mean every criticism is unjustified. Nations are accountable for their actions. Governments make mistakes. Military campaigns deserve scrutiny.

But the broader trend is becoming difficult to miss.

When the vice president of the United States publicly describes President Trump as the only world leader sympathetic to Israel, it reveals just how isolated the Jewish state has become in the eyes of many observers.

The more important question is what happens next.

If the Trump administration were to leave power, or if a future American government significantly reduced support for Israel, the geopolitical landscape would change overnight.

Israel could find itself facing unprecedented diplomatic pressure from international institutions, hostile regional powers and a growing chorus of critics throughout the West.

Such a scenario would increasingly resemble the conditions described by the prophets thousands of years ago.

For years, many dismissed those passages as impossible. America was strong. Israel had allies. The West broadly supported the Jewish state.

Today, senior officials are openly discussing Israel's growing isolation.

The headlines are changing, alliances are shifting, and the prophetic implications are becoming harder to ignore.

*James Lasher, a seasoned writer and editor at Charisma Media, combines faith and storytelling with a journalism background from Otterbein University and ministry experience in Guatemala and at the LA Dream Center. A Marine Corps and Air Force veteran, he is the author of The Revelation of Jesus: A Common Man's Commentary and a contributor to Charisma magazine. For interviews and media inquiries, please contact media@.*

Keir Starmer Resigns in Shame: Labour PM Quits After Failing Great Britain

Keir Starmer resigned Monday as Britain's prime minister and Labour Party leader, ending a brief and troubled tenure marked by broken promises, electoral disaster and failure to confront a national scandal over grooming gangs that has eroded public trust.

Starmer, who led Labour to a landslide victory in July 2024, announced his departure outside 10 Downing Street after facing an internal party mutiny. He will remain as caretaker prime minister until a successor is chosen, with nominations opening July 9 and the contest expected to conclude before Parliament returns in September.

“Every decision I’ve taken has been about putting the country I love first,” Starmer said in his resignation speech. “That is why I will resign as leader of the Labour Party.”

Order Jonathan Cahn’s New Book, “The Altar of Pergamon” on !

His exit comes less than two years into office, making him the latest in a revolving door of short-lived British prime ministers. Andy Burnham, the former mayor of Greater Manchester, is the frontrunner to replace him.

Starmer’s government failed Great Britain on multiple fronts. Despite campaigning on stability and economic renewal, he presided over a struggling economy, policy flip-flops and a sense of directionless leadership that left voters disillusioned. Labour suffered devastating losses in the May 2026 local elections, shedding nearly 1,500 seats and control of dozens of councils as Reform UK made major gains.

The timing of Starmer’s resignation, just days after the release of a high-profile independent Rape Gang Inquiry Report chaired by Reform UK MP Rupert Lowe, revealed deeper failures.

The report, released around June 16, highlighted decades of institutional cover-ups and estimated up to 250,000 victims of organized group-based child sexual exploitation, predominantly by gangs of Pakistani Muslim men. It reignited fury over authorities' reluctance to address cultural and religious patterns in the crimes – issues critics say Starmer's Labour Party long downplayed.

Critics also accused Starmer's government of "two-tier policing," pointing to cases in which citizens were jailed for social media posts, often on Facebook, while authorities appeared slower to act on grooming gang scandals and other community tensions. Starmer's time as Director of Public Prosecutions and his government's handling of related inquiries drew renewed scrutiny amid the report's findings. Combined with broader dissatisfaction, the scandals amplified perceptions of a government out of touch and unwilling to protect the most vulnerable.

Once hailed as a steady pragmatist, Starmer leaves office unloved and largely ineffective, his premiership another casualty of Britain's recent political instability.

James Lasher, a seasoned writer and editor at Charisma Media, combines faith and storytelling with a journalism background from Otterbein University and ministry experience in Guatemala and at the LA Dream Center. A Marine Corps and Air Force veteran, he is the author of The Revelation of Jesus: A Common Man's Commentary and a contributor to Charisma magazine. For interviews and media inquiries, please contact media@.*

John Bevere: Jesus Isn't Coming Back for a Relevant

Church

Spiritual warfare is not a subject we can afford to ignore.

While many believers would rather focus on more comfortable topics, Pastor Greg Laurie says Scripture gives us a clear picture of the reality of demonic activity, the tactics of the enemy and the authority we have through Jesus Christ.

In a recent teaching on spiritual warfare, Laurie warned that demons are real, active and seeking to oppose God's purposes.

At the same time, he emphasized that Satan's power is limited, we belong to God and Jesus Christ remains supreme over every force of darkness.

"The purpose of demons seems to be two-fold," Laurie said.

"Number one, they seek to hinder the purposes of God. And number two, they seek to extend the power of Satan."

Demons Are Real and Aggressive

Laurie began by addressing a truth many Christians rarely discuss.

"Three things you need to know about demons," he said.

"Number one, they're real and aggressive."

He explained that many demonic forces are currently active in the world.

"They're not all bound in this bottomless pit. This will happen later. Right now, many are roaming freely in sort of a search and destroy mission."

Laurie pointed to the book of Job, where Satan described his activity before the Lord.

"Well, I've just been going back and forth across the earth watching everything that's going on."

Laurie added, "He's just walking around, checking things out, looking for opportunities, looking for ways to bring misery and destruction."

That is why Scripture warns us to remain spiritually alert.

Quoting 1 Peter, Laurie said, "Be careful. Watch out for attacks from the devil, your great enemy. He prowls around like a roaring lion looking for some victim to devour."

To illustrate the danger, Laurie recounted the story of lions that developed a taste for human prey and quietly entered camps at night searching for victims. The point was not to create fear but to emphasize vigilance.

"So, I don't say this to freak you out. I just say this that the devil is poised and ready to strike."

His response was straightforward.

"So, put your spiritual armor on and be careful."

Order Isaiah Saldivar's Book, "How to Cast Out Demons" on !

Satan's Power Has Boundaries

Although Laurie acknowledged the reality of spiritual warfare, he stressed that Satan is not all-powerful.

"Number two, though powerful, demons and the devil himself have clear limitations."

He repeated the statement for emphasis.

"Though powerful, the devil and his demons have clear limitations."

Laurie then shared what he described as a truth the enemy would rather keep hidden.

“Let me tell you something that Satan does not want you to know. His power is considerable, but it is still limited.”

God remains sovereign over every spiritual battle.

“Remember, this is all allowed by God.”

According to Laurie, even the demonic forces described in Revelation operate within limits established by the Lord.

We Belong to God

One of the most encouraging portions of Laurie’s message centered on our identity in Christ.

“Remember I pointed out last time that when you become a believer, when you put your faith in Jesus Christ, you become His property, which is a good thing.”

He continued, “The Bible says you’re not your own. You’ve been bought with a price, and God effectively puts His ID tag on you.”

That reality carries profound significance for every believer.

“Which means you’re under His protection.”

Laurie said that belonging to Christ changes everything when it comes to spiritual warfare.

“The devil can read, and he sees that ID tag and knows that he can do nothing in the life of the Christian without the express permission of God.”

Rather than living in fear of the enemy, we can live in confidence because our lives are in God’s hands.

Demons Tremble at the Name of Jesus

Laurie then turned to the account of the demon-possessed man whose demons identified themselves as Legion.

“They said, ‘Don’t send us to the bottomless pit.’”

Their response revealed a powerful truth about Christ’s authority.

“They’re begging us because they know the power of Christ.”

Laurie emphasized that Jesus was never threatened by the demonic realm.

“He was in control.”

The lesson remains the same today.

“Jesus is more powerful than the devil. Jesus is more powerful than any demon.”

For us, that truth changes everything. We do not serve a Savior who struggles against darkness. We serve the risen King who has already defeated it.

Freedom Is Available Through Christ

Laurie concluded by speaking directly to those battling addictions, destructive habits and strongholds that seem impossible to overcome.

“He can help you overcome whatever struggle you’re facing right now.”

He specifically addressed those who feel trapped.

“Maybe it’s an addiction. Maybe it’s a lifestyle you can’t break free from. You say, ‘There’s no way out.’ There is a way out. It’s through Christ.”

The answer is not greater willpower. The answer is surrendering completely to Jesus Christ.

“You have to come to Him and say, ‘God, I’ve tried to do this on my own, and it failed. Help me.’ And He will help you.”

Our Confidence Is in Jesus Christ

Laurie’s message serves as an important reminder that spiritual warfare is real. The enemy seeks to oppose God’s purposes and bring destruction wherever possible. Yet Scripture reveals a greater reality. We do not belong to the enemy. We belong to God.

Because we have placed our faith in Jesus Christ, we stand under His protection. We are called to remain vigilant, put on the armor of God, stay rooted in His Word and walk in obedience to Him. We do so from a position of confidence, not fear.

The same Jesus who commanded Legion is the same Jesus who reigns today. The same Jesus before whom demons trembled is the same Jesus who lives within us through the Holy Spirit.

No force of darkness can overcome His power. No demonic strategy can overturn His purposes. No stronghold is greater than His authority.

Our focus should never be on magnifying the power of darkness. Our focus should be on magnifying the power of Jesus Christ. The enemy is active, but our King reigns. The enemy seeks to destroy, but our Savior still delivers, restores and sets captives free.

As Laurie declared, “Jesus is more powerful than the devil. Jesus is more powerful than any demon.”

That truth has not changed. It never will.

James Lasher, a seasoned writer and editor at Charisma Media, combines faith and storytelling with a journalism background from Otterbein University and ministry experience in Guatemala and at the LA Dream Center. A Marine Corps and Air Force veteran, he is the author of The Revelation of Jesus: A Common Man's Commentary and a contributor to Charisma magazine. For interviews and media inquiries, please contact media@.