

Scientists Warn of 'Brain Weapons' as Scripture Warns of a Time of Unprecedented Deception

Warnings about global deception have become increasingly common in Christian media, especially as technology blurs the line between manipulation and control. A new report by two leading scientists raises fresh concerns that align with biblical descriptions of a world vulnerable to powerful deception.

As reported by the Daily Mail, experts now believe mind-altering weapons are moving from theory to reality. Scientists have issued "an ominous warning over mind-altering 'brain weapons' that can target your perception, memory, and even behavior."

Dr. Michael Crowley and Professor Malcolm Dando of Bradford University argue that recent advancements should be a "wake-up call." Dando cautioned, "The same knowledge that helps us treat neurological disorders could be used to disrupt cognition, induce compliance, or even, in the future, turn people into unwitting agents."

Major powers – including the U.S., China, Russia, and the U.K. – have researched central nervous system (CNS) weapons since the 1950s. The Daily Mail notes historical efforts such as America's BZ compound and China's "narcosis-gun." The only confirmed battlefield use came in 2002, when Russian forces deployed a fentanyl-derived agent during the Moscow theater siege, killing 120 hostages.

What alarms researchers now is how precise these tools have become. "We are entering an era where the brain itself could become a battlefield," Dando said. "The tools to manipulate the central nervous system... are becoming more precise, more accessible, and more attractive to states."

The scientists warn that CNS-targeting weapons fall into a regulatory "loophole" under chemical weapons law, which bans harmful chemicals in warfare but allows certain substances for law enforcement. This gap, they argue, could embolden governments to pursue mind-altering weapons legally.

This conversation echoes Scripture's description of widespread deception in the last days. Jesus warned, "See that no one deceives you," a command that takes on new weight as technologies emerge that can influence perception and decision-making.

While these developments do not fulfill prophecy directly, they point toward a world increasingly shaped by manipulation – a world the Bible describes with striking clarity. As concerns rise over "brain weapons," the need for discernment becomes more urgent in an age where the battleground may shift to the human mind itself.

Vlad Savchuk: Why Your Breakthrough Is Delayed but Not Denied

Franklin Graham helped usher in the Christmas season at Fox News' annual Christmas tree lighting in New York City, reminding the nation that giving is rooted in the very heart of the holiday. Standing before hundreds gathered on Fox Square, he pointed back to what he called "the first gift" of Christmas, God giving His Son, Jesus Christ.

Graham's message came during the network's holiday kickoff, as reported by Fox News, and centered on generosity, purpose and the mission of Samaritan's Purse through Operation Christmas Child. The international project is preparing to deliver more than 13 million shoebox gifts to children in over 130 countries. Each box is filled with small treasures and essentials that reflect the love behind them.

Graham held up one of those gifts, a shoebox packed by his 3-year-old granddaughter. It contained a Minnie Mouse plush, school supplies and a handwritten note. It represented the simple yet powerful impact of a gift chosen with care. "This year, we'll have about 13 million of these boxes," he said. "Each one has about 30 gifts in it. And what we want to teach children is the importance of giving."

That foundation of giving runs throughout the project's 30-year history. Graham told the crowd that the goal is not only to place gifts in children's hands but also to nurture hearts that understand generosity. "God gave His Son, Jesus Christ," he said. "And we want the children of the world to understand the importance of receiving a gift, and for the children who pack them, the importance of learning how to give.”

Fox News employees contributed to the effort themselves, packing more than 400 shoeboxes ahead of National Collection Week. Graham praised their involvement, saying, “To have the help of Fox, packing boxes, it’s been wonderful. It’s a great partnership.”

Nearly 300,000 volunteers support Operation Christmas Child and reach children in jungles, slums, mountainside villages, and remote Pacific islands. Almost 5,000 drop-off locations opened nationwide for families and churches delivering boxes filled with toys, hygiene items, and school supplies. Families can also build a shoebox online by selecting items and adding a photo or note.

The project’s reach extends far beyond the gifts themselves. Many distributions are coordinated through local churches that combine the shoeboxes with outreach events and follow-up programs. Graham said each gift provides a door to share more profound hope with a child. “I am so grateful for each and every person who makes this project possible and for every shoebox that opens the door for us to tell another child the Good News of Jesus Christ,” he told Fox News Digital.

As lights glowed across midtown Manhattan, Graham brought the moment back to its center. “Christmas is about giving,” he said. “God gave the first gift, His Son, Jesus Christ, who came to take our sins. At Christmas, we honor Jesus Christ and remember what He did for us.”

In a season crowded with distractions, Operation Christmas Child continues to point families toward the joy of giving freely and mirroring the generosity that defines the celebration of Christ’s birth.

Dragged Into the Supernatural: A Former New Ager Exposes the Darkness

Every generation wonders whether it might be standing at the edge of history. Most brush the thought away. But Randy Kay's latest message forces a second look—not because of sensationalism, but because of the unusual way multiple timelines, biblical patterns, and even artificial intelligence seem to be pointing toward the same narrow window.

Kay is known for his 2005 near-death experience, where he says he died for 30 minutes, encountered Jesus, and was shown a five-stage sequence of the end times: the storm, an outpouring of God's glory, the rapture, the tribulation, and the second coming leading into a new heaven and earth.

For 16 years, he says he couldn't share any of it—until one moment on a rocky shore in Carlsbad, California, changed everything.

The Moment Everything Shifted

In 2021, during a rare Pacific storm, he says he heard a whisper: "It is time." He took that moment as permission to speak, marking the beginning of “Stage One,” a global increase in dreams, visions, and supernatural encounters he links to Joel’s prophecy. His own database of near-death testimonies, he says, has shown a dramatic rise in people reporting urgent messages since that year.

When AI Entered the Conversation

The most surprising development came when he asked AI to analyze biblical prophecy frameworks alongside modern events. He fed it Daniel’s 70 weeks, the fig tree generation in Matthew 24, Israel’s 1948 rebirth, Jewish sabbatical cycles, and today’s geopolitical shifts.

The conclusion wasn’t a prediction—but a pattern: if the models are valid, the tribulation most plausibly falls between 2028 and 2032, with 2030 showing the most substantial alignment.

That startled Kay because of something he claims happened two years earlier. In 2022, he says the Lord told him he had “less than fourteen years” to complete his ministry—placing the end around 2036–2037. A seven-year tribulation beginning near 2030 would land exactly in that range. He doesn’t call this a confirmation, but he sees it as a striking convergence.

Technology That Looks Biblical

For centuries, Revelation 13 sounded impossible. Today, it reads more like a headline. Kay points to AI that can impersonate anyone, deepfakes that blur truth, biometric IDs, microchip implants, neural interfaces, programmable digital currencies, and global surveillance networks.

In his view, the infrastructure needed for the Antichrist system isn't hypothetical anymore. It already exists—and it's waiting for a leader powerful enough to use it.

A Window of Convergence

Put together, Kay sees a cluster of patterns all pointing toward a similar window: the fig tree generation ending around 2028–2030, the AI analysis pointing to 2030, the sabbatical cycles aligning with the 2030s, Daniel's day-year calculations landing near 2031, and his own 2021 "It is time" moment marking the start of a global shift.

He isn't setting dates and is careful to say so. His message is simpler: pay attention to the season.

Living in the First Stage

Kay believes we are already in the opening phase of the sequence he was shown in 2005. If that is true, the remaining stages could unfold more quickly than most expect.

Whether every calculation proves accurate or not, the wider point remains sobering: technology, geopolitics, and biblical patterns are converging in ways previous generations never saw. Kay's conclusion is straightforward. The window, whatever size it is, is narrowing. And he believes now is the time to wake up, prepare, and live with urgency—because the storm, as he puts it, is already here.

5 Demonic Strategies Jonathan Cahn Warns Are Reshaping America

The warnings coming from Pastor Jack Hibbs and former Muslim insider Hedieh Mirahmadi Falco are not casual observations about politics or culture. They describe a movement with centuries of ideological continuity, a strategy aimed at reshaping nations and laws, and a spiritual vacuum in America that has allowed it to advance largely unchallenged. Their message is clear: what is happening is not random, and ignoring it will not make it go away.

“You need to sit down. You need to hang on because what you’re about to hear is not only going to be true, it just might be too much for you,” Hibbs opened his podcast. “You are about to hear some things that you need to learn, know, and get ready for.”

His guest, Hedieh Mirahmadi Falco, was born and raised Muslim to Iranian parents, worked under multiple U.S. administrations, held a top secret clearance and helped design FBI counter-radicalization programs. Today, she follows Christ and warns believers about what she once helped analyze from the inside.

“We as Christians, we love all people. So we’re not talking about Muslims, we’re talking about the ideology,” she said.

Islam as Global Ideology, Not Just Private Faith

Mirahmadi argues Americans have been shielded from Islam's historical and doctrinal aims.

"Once the Islamic army advances outside of Mecca, 632 BC about, it starts invading all of these Christian lands," she said. "By 732 BC, almost that entire region that was Christendom is conquered."

Hibbs pressed her on whether Islam is merely a religion.

"Are you suggesting... that Islam is a theocratic geopolitical ideology that has conquer and conquest in its mindset?" he asked.

"It's at the root of Islam," she replied. "It's a global expansionist doctrine, folks. And they've never denied that."

She outlined Islam's two-phase strategy:

- Phase one: military conquest across Christian territories until World War I.
- Phase two: political, demographic and cultural "jihad" once military defeat was no longer possible, advanced through groups like the Muslim Brotherhood.

Central to this is Sharia.

"So Sharia is all of it. If you are devout, you abide and believe in all of it," she said. "It's a parallel legal system."

Once embraced, she argued, it cannot coexist with constitutional loyalty.

"How do you technically sincerely take an oath of office to defend the Constitution when you believe in a parallel legal system?" she said.

She also highlighted the doctrine of deception used outside Islamic rule: "It is legal in Islam to lie to advance the cause."

Political Footprint Growing Inside the United States

Mirahmadi said the ideological advance is already measurable in American elections.

"For us here in the United States, 42 Muslim Americans were elected to office in this cycle," she said. "So there's 280 Muslim American officials in total."

They pointed to Hamtramck, Michigan – called "America's first Sharia city" – and to a CAIR-produced map of Muslim elected officials by state, which Mirahmadi interprets as evidence of strategic expansion.

More concerning, she said, are international inroads. She highlighted the Qatar-backed peace negotiations and the unexpected concession buried inside them:

"Part of their aid package... was a military installation inside our military base in Idaho." She described it as an "Islamic footprint of dominance" in a state previously untouched by such influence.

"Not the Same God": A Warning to Churches

Mirahmadi insisted that interfaith claims equating Allah with the God of Scripture blind Christians to the truth.

"A lot of churches... say that Allah is the same God," she said. "But it's so important for Christians to know that is not correct."

“The understanding in the Quran... of who Jesus is, is He’s a prophet. He is not the Son of God,” she said. “By saying it’s the same God, you’re woefully deceiving yourself and the Muslim.”

And for Muslims who leave Islam, she underscored the stakes: “The punishment for apostasy is death.”

What Christians Must Do Now

They urged believers to act immediately:

- Teach a clear, courageous worldview rather than shallow positivity.
- Engage in local and national politics – school boards, councils, legislatures.
- Educate families about Islamic doctrine, history and the meaning of current events.
- Refuse intimidation from labels designed to silence concerns.

Her closing appeal pointed back to the message that transformed her life.

“The greatest secret... is that Jesus saves,” she said. “I lived as a devout Muslim and nothing in me ever changed... The transformation I’ve experienced now is only by virtue of the indwelling of the Holy Spirit.”

The conversation ends where it began – with urgency. What Hibbs and Mirahmadi describe is not theoretical, not distant, and not slowing down. Their warning is that the stakes are higher than politics, and the consequences of inaction are already unfolding. The response, they argue, must be informed, courageous and rooted in truth before the window to act is gone.
