Laugh Your Way To A Better Marriage Retreat

Is laughter the remedy for divorce? The Christian filmmakers behind Marriage Retreat (on DVD Aug. 23) think so. They soften a few hard lessons about love and relationships by playing up the laughs as three struggling couples embark on a  marriage-enrichment getaway led by a “uniquely yoked” duo.

“We think it’s important to laugh at ourselves,” says David A.R. White, one of the male leads. “Humor can lower people’s defenses; their walls come down and it allows the message to penetrate.” For more information go to .

Period Baseball Drama Pitches Christ

Throwing a curveball at the viewer, baseball drama Milltown Pride sets the story of the prodigal son in the sports world. The Bob Jones University feature-length film follows Will Wright as he leaves his privileged background to pursue a baseball career by joining a local textile-mill team. His journey includes an encounter with real-life evangelist Billy Sunday, himself a former baseball star, played by scriptwriter David Burke.

Filming took place in four states, including at a baseball field with stands dating back to the time period. Cast and crew were largely drawn from the faculty and student body, though several hundred extras from the local community were drafted in for some scenes.

With its solid story, the film should encourage “anyone who knows someone who has lost his or her way, who has lost their focus on God,” producer Darren Lawson says. “There is hope, just by turning back to God.”
