

If the Holy Spirit Isn't Near It, This Bold Pastor Isn't Saying It

Pastor John Amanchukwu knows his limits. He knows he's not as bold and courageous to stand up to people in a public forum as he would like to be.

But when the Holy Spirit gets hold of him, Amanchukwu says "look out." When the Holy Spirit takes the lead for him, Amanchukwu says he will testify and be a witness to the truth of God and His Word, no matter what the subject.

It's what leads him to speak in front of school boards about pornographic books in school libraries, and it's what leads him to be a fearless defender of biblical justice on issues like abortion and the lie of critical race theory.

"Well, it's always the anointing of God, it's not me," Amanchukwu told Charisma News' John Matarazzo in a recent interview. "It's not me. I'm man and I'm fallible, born in sin and sharpened in iniquity. Christ has forgiven me for my sins and covered me with His blood. But at the end the day, I'm human.

"So, I depend upon the third part of the Trinity, and that's the Holy Spirit that dwells within me and gives me the proper words to say in the proper timing. I believe that when you have the Holy Spirit, number one, it will testify of Christ beyond just speaking in tongues. You will testify and be a witness to the truth. And that's what I did at that moment (at the school board meeting in Asheville, North Carolina, recently).

And Amanchukw, a contributor for TPUSAFAITH, says he lives by Mark 13:11, which reads, "But when they arrest you and hand you over, take no thought before, or premeditate what you should speak. But speak whatever is given you in that time, for it is not you who speaks, but the Holy Spirit."

Many people speak their minds about many subjects, including well-intentioned believers. But their words fall short of effectiveness because the Holy Spirit is nowhere near the conversation.

That's why when he spoke in front of the Asheville School board, and when he speaks in other public forums, he remains still and waits for the Holy Spirit to prompt him about what should come out of his mouth.

"I had some thoughts in mind about what related to the conversation, but I would have never known in a million years that I would be cut off and told to stop reading," Amanchukwu says. "And all of a sudden, the Holy Spirit just took control. You can see it in the video."

Amanchuku is crusading for children across the country, speaking out about abortion and the "woke" ideologies that are being forced upon kids in our public schools.

And, he says, the Bible is pretty clear about what will happen to those who "harm children" in any way.

"Luke 17:2 says that it's better for a man to be thrown in the sea with a millstone tied around his neck than for us to do harm or damage to a child," Amanchukwu says. "There are so many people in this country who are harming children. They are perverting children and corrupting the minds of children. If you consider the abortion industry, they want to eliminate children.

"When you consider the public school system, even some of your private Christian schools, they've gone woke. They want to indoctrinate children. There are so many attacks that have been launched and hurled upon children. So, it's going to take men and women full of the Spirit ... consider the power that indwelled Peter on the day of Pentecost. ... He began to preach in a manner that they had never heard before. We finally see Peter, the 'rock man,' transformed into that strong anchor that Christ knew he would be before He told him that Satan would come and sift him as wheat.

"And so, today, we need boldness. In particular, in the church, we need the pastors to stand up. Many of our pastors have become weak and frail. They have lost their voice and lost their backbone and won't speak up. Many pastors have blood on their hands because they have failed to be true watchmen. Watchmen are called not simply to watch, but to warn. I got fed up of just hearing about what's going on in this country. So, I went down to Asheville and I not only showed them what was in the book, but I made a strong stand against it."

And he did so, of course, with the covering of the Holy Spirit. That, he says, is what believers must do against the evil and tyranny happening in America right now. {eoa}

'Passionate' Pastor Crusades for Schoolchildren Against Demonic Ideologies

Passionate about God's truth, Pastor John Amanchukwu Sr. didn't mind driving a total of eight hours to speak for three minutes. He didn't get paid for his appearance, nor did he care.

All he wanted to do was let the Asheville, North Carolina, school board know that many people are fed up with their shenanigans, and they aren't going to take it anymore.

In this Twitter video, Amanchukwu went on a three-minute tirade to the board about a "woke" book, "It's Perfectly Normal: Changing Bodies, Growing Up, Sex, Gender and Sexual Health," that is being pushed upon children in that district.

Amanchukwu believes it is pornography—and rightfully so—as the school board members soon discovered after Amanchukwu began reading from the book and was told to stop. Amanchukwu's reaction to the school board's reaction was priceless.

"Was it something I said?" the pastor asked. "If you don't want to hear it in a school board meeting, why should children be able to check it out of the school system?"

Amanchukwu is known as a rising voice for conservatives and Christians who is exposing the racist ideologies of abortion and critical race theory, among other things—like the pushing of pornography and the LGBTQ agenda in schools.

"I'm passionate about truth. I'm a pastor, and I've been pastoring youth and young adults for over the past 10 years," Amanchukwu tells Charisma News' John Matarazzo in a recent interview. "I'm a father of three children, I'm a husband and I want our children to go to school and not be indoctrinated into ideologies like critical race theory, gender theory, queer theory, and intersectionality.

"So, I drove a total of eight hours," he says. "I wasn't going to pick up a check or anything like that. I was going to really address the school board there because Asheville is known as the 'wokest city' in North Carolina. It's deep, deep, deep blue. And I believe the entire school board is Democrat.

So, there's a lot of political indoctrination in Asheville as well.

"And so I want it to go to that city and to address this book," Amanchukwu adds. "It's a book that is for children ages 10 and up. There are students in elementary schools and middle schools who can get their hands on this book. And this book is not soft porn; it's hard porn. It's hard core, it would give 'Swank' and 'Hustler' magazine and 'Playboy' a run for [their] money. Hugh Hefner has nothing on this."

The book, the pastor says, features images of straight sex, lesbian sex and gay sex, and he says that's not "perfectly normal" material to put before a child—or anyone else for that matter.

"That's perfectly perverted," Amanchukwu says. "And we have to call out the perversion. I'll say this as well. I don't want to get political, but you know, you kind of have to these days because we're dealing with political issues. There is one political party in this country who supports this kind of stuff, who supports the mutilation of children, the castration of children, the indoctrination of children, the annihilation of children, the murdering of children, and that's the Democrat Party."

"The entire board in Asheville, they're Democrats," he says. "So to them, this is perfectly normal to sexualize children at a young age and to rob them of their innocence; to put things before them that they should not know before their time. The Bible talks about not awakening love before its time. When you crack that egg, that egg is now open. When you take the lid off of passion and lust—because these things are natural even within us—but the Bible tells us that 'in our flesh dwells no good thing.'"

"But when you begin to put things before them—pornographic materials—and make it accessible in libraries in the name of diversity, inclusion and equity, you're on a slippery slope," Amanchukwu says. "I went to Asheville to remind them of the dastardly deeds that they are doing to children. And this book is not simply in Asheville only; this book is in schools all around the country."

A contributor to Turning Point USA, Amanchukwu also works with an organization called The Pavement Education Project, which he says has archived all of the "woke books" in North Carolina—books that talk about critical race theory, intersectionality gender theory or queer theory.

Amanchukwu says all of these books are pornographic, and that The Pavement Education Project has "gone out of its way" to catalogue these books so parents can visit the website and see what books are in their schools in North Carolina.

"This organization is epic," he says. "I've worked with them throughout the state. Go and follow them and support them and see more about what they are doing."

The first time he read "Perfectly Normal," Amanchukwu says he was "disgusted."

"I had multiple emotions," the pastor says. "I was angry. I was filled with righteous indignation. I was sad, and I was perplexed."

In the meantime, Amanchukwu warns parents about what their children are exposed to in public schools and asks what they would think if they were that age and had this type of material put in front of them.

"When I was 10 years of age, I could only imagine going to the library and seeing this," he says. "I tell a joke to people that if this book was in my school library, it probably would have been checked out once and I would have kept it at home and told the librarian I didn't know what happened to it. I turned it in, and no one knows where it's at."

“This type of material, to a child, they want to see it because it’s explicit,” he says. “When I went to that school board meeting and read from this book, the school board members, in particular the chairman, told me to stop reading. After 10 seconds I stopped reading, and he said he pretty much didn’t want me to read it aloud. If you can’t read the book in a school board meeting, why on God’s earth is that book in the library? It makes no sense.”

Amanchukwu says as long as the anointing of God is in him, he will continue to crusade against such atrocities being committed in our public schools.

“I depend upon the third part of the Trinity—the Holy Spirit that dwells within me and gives me the words to say in proper timing,” he says. “I believe that when you have the Holy Spirit, it will testify of Christ beyond just speaking in tongues. You will testify and be a witness to the truth. And that’s what I did in that moment.” {eoa}

Sean Feucht Shares Open Vision: ‘I See People Falling in Love with Jesus’

Evangelist Sean Feucht was leading worship in Orange County, California last Sunday, when suddenly, with the “presence of God so thick,” a vision came upon him. He admits it’s something that doesn’t happen very much to him, but the vision was powerful, and he simply couldn’t ignore it.

While singing "Take Me Back to My First Love," the Lord gave him a picture of people waking up, getting their morning coffee, reading the Bible and "falling in love with Jesus all over again."

"It was certainly a spontaneous moment, and the Lord was reminding me that because of the increase in wickedness in this world right now, the love of many will grow cold," Feucht told Charisma News in an exclusive interview from his California home. "Right now, we're so full of wickedness. It's everywhere; it's all around us."

"You can't shop at Target and not encounter wickedness. It's in your face—perversion, slander, darkness. Because of the darkness and wickedness that has ramped heart for God is gone. It's become discouraging."

"But as we were singing, I saw this picture of people waking up and flocking back to Jesus. And I'm not just talking about revival in a corporate sense. I do love revival meetings, worship and altar calls, but this was about personal revival—revival in the secret place. That is what leads to revival in the public place. Let's just say I saw people all over America, and all over the world, falling in love with Jesus again."

Feucht also posted this message on Facebook about his open vision.
