

Update Released on 12-Year-Old Girl Injured in Annunciation School Shooting

A young girl seriously injured in last month's Annunciation Church and School shooting has been released from the hospital

Lydia Kaiser, 12, suffered a traumatic brain injury Aug. 27 when a deranged gunman opened fire on a church service she was attending, Minneapolis CBS affiliate WCCO-TV reported.

Two children were killed in the shooting and nearly two dozen others at the morning mass, mostly fellow students, were injured.

Kaiser had surgery to remove bullet fragments from her brain and also had a decompressive hemicraniectomy to alleviate pressure in the brain, according to WCCO.

Kaiser is facing a third brain surgery, but her family announced in a GoFundMe appeal that she has been walking and talking, and she has been released from the hospital.

The upcoming surgery "will be to replace the section of her skull that was removed to allow for swelling of her brain," the family reported in the GoFundMe appeal. That fundraiser had brought in close to $381,000 by Tuesday evening.

The family said funds raised will be used to cover "medical expenses, ongoing care, trauma counseling, lost income, and the countless unknowns that lie ahead."

The family requested prayers for Lydia's recovery, as well as "for all of the students and teachers touched by this tragedy," and for "the first responders and community members that were there to help."
