

A Military Veteran's Fix for Cracked Feet

In the military, your feet take a beating.

All that marching and running in heavy boots, it tears up soldiers' feet.

Just ask Private First Class Jack Franklin, who almost didn't make it out because his feet were so cracked and damaged.

Jack was heading out on assignment, marching when he had to stop in his tracks.

Severe pain was shooting through his feet. He pulled off his boots to take a look.

His feet were cracked, dry, sore, and covered in painful callouses.

He called out to his buddy—a military doctor—who hurried over to help.

"Jack," the doctor said, "your feet are gonna get us killed!"

Thinking quickly, the doctor pulled out a homemade cream that he had whipped up back at the base the day before.

Within minutes, Jack was feeling relief and sprung back into action!

When he got back to the base, everyone in his squadron wanted to know his secret.

He told them about the incredible solution the doctor had found. Soon enough, his entire platoon started using this method with incredible results.

And once word got back, soldiers, first responders, veterans and civilians started using his at-home method, because it works so well to relieve dry, cracked, pained, calloused feet.

Finally, the doctor created a video presentation about this method that shows how you can do it right in your own home.
