

Abby Johnson's Powerful Response to the Claim That Unborn Babies Are 'Just Tissue'

Abby Johnson is famous for her public transformation from Planned Parenthood clinic director to one of America's most outspoken pro-life advocates.

Johnson, whose story was told through the feature film Unplanned, recently appeared on The Pure Flix Podcast, where she addressed those who claim unborn babies are "just tissue."

"I always hear pro-choice people say, 'Abortion is so difficult,'" Johnson said, noting that she sees a problem with pro-choice individuals making this proclamation.

In her view, there's an ideological inconsistency, specifically when it comes to the mourning and hesitation exhibited by some people on the pro-choice side who would also call unborn babies mere tissue.

Listen to Johnson break down her perspective:

"If you don't believe that [it] is a human being in the womb—if you truly do believe that it's just tissue, that it's just cells, that it's just waste, something to be discarded, why is it difficult for the woman?" Johnson asked. "It's only difficult if you admit that it actually is ending the life of a human being."

At the core of the issue, Johnson said, is the pro-choice movement's tendency to engage in what she framed as double-talk.

"When they're comparing the unborn child to just tissue or when they're actually calling an unborn child a parasite ... they're talking out of both sides of their mouth," she said. "They're using dehumanizing language, but then they're also saying that it's difficult—and it cannot be both."

Johnson continues to be outspoken about her pro-life worldview, launching a plethora of ministry activities to help pregnant women and individuals who are trying to leave jobs at abortion clinics.
