

Actor Alleges Pedophilia Is Hollywood's Biggest Problem—Not #MeToo

Popular 1980s actor Corey Feldman says Hollywood's biggest problem isn't the #MeToo movement. Instead, the actor alleges it's pedophilia as older industry executives prey on children.

Feldman claims his long-awaited documentary will expose Hollywood's child sex ring and will name the abusers that molested him and friend Corey Haim, who died in 2010. The documentary is tentatively titled Truth: The Rape of the Two Coreys.

Documentary production has been in the works for years.

In a 2017 plea to crowdfunders, Feldman said the documentary "can literally change the entertainment system as we know it. I believe that I can also bring down potentially a pedophile ring that I've been aware of since I was a child. ... Right off the bat I can name six names—one of them who is still very powerful today, and a story that links all the way up to a studio. It connects pedophilia to one of the major studios."

"I propose to do this by making a film that will be the most honest and true depiction of child abuse ever portrayed by telling you my own story in a very real way," Feldman said. "I will make the film, direct it, produce it and I will self-distribute it to guarantee that it gets a theatrical release with your donations. Additionally, it will help me buy the security and the legal team that I need to help my family until the project is released. Once it's done, I believe we can revolutionize the entertainment industry in such a way that we can root out the evil and make it safe for our kids again."
