Filmmaker Tim Mahoney has long been on a mission to help viewers see the Bible through new and innovative storytelling methods, exploring proof for the Exodus, among other topics.

His latest, two-part project, “Seven Churches of Revelation,” is an undertaking he believes will be “really important for Christians today.”

“Many people are wondering – they’re feeling uneasy about the future, and they’re wondering, ‘Are we living in the last days?’” he said.

Mahoney argues that this inquisitive feeling is similar to what some experienced millennia ago when the Book of Revelation was being written. Thus, this question has persisted throughout human history.

“Every century throughout history, there’s been questions,” he said. “Is Christ going to be returning? And the letter that John wrote – or the Revelation ... he was visited and he was given this amazing look into the future, but a lot of people don’t know, ‘How do I contextualize that right now? What does it mean?’”

“Seven Churches of Revelation,” Mahoney said, is a two-film project that hit theaters earlier this year (the first part is “Times of Fire” and the second is “Times of Deception”). Both films are now available for home entertainment.

It’s a project the movie-maker hopes will help Christians explore how best to live in light of prophecy and Scripture. The films explore the seven churches mentioned in Revelation; they look at their locations as well as the archeology surrounding them.
