

Artemis II Astronaut Victor Glover Delivers Powerful Easter Message From Deep Space

The vast silence of space has a way of stripping life down to what matters most. From that vantage point, Victor Glover is not just piloting a historic mission. He is speaking directly to people back on Earth.

During a live interview with CBS News, as part of the Artemis II crew's journey beyond Earth's orbit, Glover delivered an Easter message that carried unusual weight. He was not addressing fellow astronauts. He was speaking to humanity watching from home.

"I don't have anything prepared. I'm glad you brought it up, though; I think these observances are important," Glover said when asked about the holiday.

Floating in the void, with Earth suspended in the distance, Glover described a perspective few humans have ever experienced, sharing it in real time with those still on the planet.

"As we are so far from Earth and looking at the beauty of creation, I think, for me, one of the really important personal perspectives that I have up here is I can really see the Earth as one thing," he said.

Order Travis Johnson's New Book, "[Un]Embarrassed" on !

That view does something. It removes borders. It silences noise. It reveals design.

"When I read the Bible and I look at all the amazing things that were done for us... You guys are talking to us because we're in a spaceship really far from earth, but you're on a spaceship called Earth that was created to give us a place to live in the universe and the cosmos."

From deep space, Earth does not look ordinary. It looks intentional.

Glover made it clear that his words were meant for those listening back home.

"Maybe the distance we are from you makes you think what we're doing is special, but we're the same distance from you. And I'm trying to tell you just trust me you are special," he said. "In all of this emptiness this is a whole bunch of nothing this thing we call the universe you have this oasis this beautiful place that we get to exist together."

It is a striking picture. Endless darkness surrounding a single, life-filled world. Not random. Not accidental. Set apart.

Easter, Glover said, is the perfect moment for those on Earth to pause and recognize that truth.

"I think, as we go into Easter Sunday, thinking about all the cultures all around the world, whether you celebrate it or not, whether you believe in God or not, this is an opportunity for us to remember where we are, who we are, and that we are the same thing, and that we've gotta get through this together."

From millions of miles away, the message is not distant at all. It is directed straight at those living on the very world he described.

Creation is not just something to observe. It is something to recognize, to steward and to stand in awe of.

James Lasher, a seasoned writer and editor at Charisma Media, combines faith and storytelling with a background in journalism from Otterbein University and ministry experience in Guatemala and the LA Dream Center. A Marine Corps and Air Force veteran, he is the author of The Revelation of Jesus: A Common Man's Commentary and a contributor to Charisma magazine. For interviews and media inquiries, please contact media@.