

Bibles Required in Classrooms, Regarded as America's Bedrock

The Bible is heading back to the classroom in the Sooner State.

Oklahoma officials announced June 27, the state is requiring a copy of the Bible to be in every public school classroom, beginning immediately, according to The Oklahoman.

Oklahoma kids will learn that the Bible and the Ten Commandments are foundational for western civilization. The left is upset, but one cannot rewrite history.

– Superintendent Ryan Walters (@RyanWaltersSupt) June 27, 2024

“Adherence to this mandate is compulsory,” said Ryan Walters, superintendent of Oklahoma state schools. “Further instructions for monitoring and reporting on this implementation for the 2024/25 school year will be forthcoming. Immediate and strict compliance is expected.”

During a press conference, Walters described the Bible as a “necessary historical document to teach our kids about the history of this country, to have a complete understanding of Western civilization [and] to have an understanding of the basis of our legal system.”

He went on to say the Holy Book is “one of the most foundational documents used for the Constitution and the birth of our country.”

While Walters did not state where—or how prominently—the Bibles must be displayed, he has ordered the Scriptures be present in classrooms in grades five through 12. He prescribed the mandate in a letter sent to all public school superintendents across Oklahoma.
