Bobby Jindal ended Louisiana's state funding of Planned Parenthood after the Center for Medical Progress released a series of undercover videos showing the abortion provider discussing the harvesting and sale of aborted babies' body parts. On Thursday, a group of pro-abortion protesters – decked in pink – protested outside the governor's mansion in Baton Rouge. They insist that Planned Parenthood provides unique women's health services no other group provides (although community health centers outnumber Planned Parenthood facilities by more than 12-to-one). Jindal decided to go on offense instead of playing defense. He set up a large screen outside the mansion and broadcast CMP's undercover videos "so protesters could see why he made the decision he did," according to his campaign. The group instead decided to disperse. I guess the truth hurts. Check out the action in this brief video:
