

Breaking Update: Dallas Jenkins Reveals What's Next for 'The Chosen' and Faith-Based Cinema

Dallas Jenkins, creator of 'The Chosen,' is breathing new life into one of his earlier projects.

In an interview with Charisma Media, Jenkins shared how his 2010 faith-based film "What If," starring Kevin Sorbo, Christy Swanson and John Ratzenberger, will return to theaters for a special two-day engagement on August 5 and 7. For Jenkins, the message of the movie is "more timely today than it even was 15 years ago."

The film explores a timeless question: What if you had followed God's calling instead of chasing worldly success? Jenkins explains, "It's kind of a reverse 'It's a Wonderful Life.' In that movie, George Bailey sees what the world would've looked like if he'd never been born. In 'What If,' Kevin Sorbo's character sees what life would've looked like if he'd made the right decision." In the movie, the character had traded love and ministry for money and status—only to discover that true fulfillment comes from faith, fatherhood and service.
