

California Teacher Sounding the Alarm on Crisis Hotline in Schools

Read Time: 2 minutes 14 seconds

Teacher and activist Brenda Lebsack has worked in the educational system for 25 years. She was an elected school board member for the Orange Unified School District until 2020, and now she is sounding the alarm on a suicide prevention resource offered in public schools nationwide.

The Trevor Project is considered the LGBTQ suicide prevention resource for students when they call the mental or crisis hotlines in school. Any child, at any age, when they are unsure of their gender or sexuality will automatically be referred to the Trevor Project and then to 'Trevor Space,' to talk with random adults online.

Lebsack's concern is the open door this creates for predators to target innocent kids who are trying to find help.

One of Trevor Space's advocates is Sam Brinton, who was hired by the Biden Administration as deputy assistant secretary of spent fuel and waste.

"He has a lot of clout for these kids to look up to him because he has a high title," Lebsack says.

What Brinton advocates for is can be highly alarming, Lebsack says, "He doesn't hide his sexual activities." Brinton has pictures dressed in leather doing something called 'pup play.'

"Where you pretend, pup play, different men and women who are your pups, treat them like dogs and have sex with them. That's what he does," Lebsack says. In a Polytechnic article, a student writer talked about an event Brinton held on campus going into detail about the different kind of kinks he is involved in.

When public schools students, of any age, reach out to these groups Lebsack says they are “love bombed” and told how they can come out to their parents and be any sexuality they want. Parents aren’t aware of these hotlines and many teachers aren’t either.

The Trevor Project gave Lil Nas X the 2021 Advocate Award and highlighted his song, ‘MONTERO’ which is clearly demonic. “The lyrics glorify cocaine, having sex with elites for money, mentions children and the video shows him having anal sex with Satan and taking over his throne,” Lebsack says.

Lil Nas X has been methodical about influencing young children and Lebsack exposes his methods on her website. Here is what he’s done:

- March 2020 he performed with Elmo on Sesame Street.
- November 2020 the singer was featured on Roblox a popular game for kids.
- January 2021 Lil Nas X releases a children’s book ‘C is for Country’ teaching kids to celebrate individuality.
- March 2021 he release his special edition Nike shoes that have gone viral around the world as ‘Satan Shoes.’ He put the shoes out with the MSCHF company, whose slogan is “Better to rein in hell, than serve in heaven.”
- March 2021 the singer releases his demonic song ‘MONTERO.’

These are just two of the advocates the Trevor Project has highlighted for their efforts to the organization.

“They are using these online platforms to groom children, to indoctrinate children and to get them in touch with adults. Parents have no idea who these people are,” Lebsack says. Her main concern now is getting the word out about what is going on around the nation that most people aren't even aware of.
