

Candace Cameron Bure's Son Explains the Importance of Spending Time With God

Candace Cameron Bure's 19-year-old son, Lev Bure, explained the importance of spending time with God to social media followers while he was on a road trip.

One follower asked, "Any advice for how to trust God/ grow a relationship w[ith] Jesus?"

Bure responded, "I love this question because it was something I always thought about and still do. Just like a relationship with anyone, you spend time with them. Spend time alone with God and His Word. What hit me hard, was when someone told me: If you don't spend time with God, how do you expect to build a relationship with Him?"

Another one of Bure's follower's asked, "Was there a time where you really 'NEEDED' God?"

"I was actually going to find an example for this question, but then I thought: When is there a time when we don't need Him? We desperately need Him in every aspect of our lives," Bure said.

Bure continued, drawing on the words found in 1 Timothy 6:12.

"We can't fight the good fight on our own with our own strength. As sinners, we deserve hell, but we have undeservingly received God's grace and mercy ... the gift that we get to spend eternity with Him." {eo}

This article originally appeared on MovieGuide®. Find out what God's doing in Hollywood.

Read articles like this one and other Spirit-led content in our new platform, CHARISMA PLUS.