

Carrie Underwood, Husband Mike Fisher Give Unfiltered Glimpse Into Their Faith, Marriage

Mike and Carrie: God & Country, a new exclusive short film series from I Am Second, provides an up-close and unfiltered glimpse into the life, relationship and faith of retired NHL player Mike Fisher and his wife Carrie Underwood, seven-time Grammy Award winner.

In the four-part series releasing on via weekly episodes beginning May 27, this powerhouse couple provides insight into how they continually sustain their marriage, despite sometimes differing views and devastating loss, and find purpose beyond the professional accomplishments by which the world defines them.

Throughout the series, Fisher and Underwood speak frankly about their personal journeys and provide hope and inspiration to anyone seeking or needing encouragement.

"I think sometimes I'm guilty of treating God like a genie and just wanting Him to give me everything I ask when I ask," said Fisher. "But what I've learned through these ups and downs is that He's so much better than that."

While Fisher and Underwood have each publicly spoken about their personal lives in the past, the new I Am Second series provides a specific, intimate look into their relationship, parenting journey and faith.

"We learn from each other, and we have spirited discussions on things we disagree on," said Underwood. "But at the end of the day, we love each other very much."

The full series will release in four-part installments, beginning on May 27, on . {eo}

I Am Second is a nonprofit that ignites hope and inspires people to live for something greater than themselves. Launched in 2008, the website features powerful short films of athletes, actors, models, musicians, cultural influencers, and everyday people who have found hope through a relationship with Jesus. Watch their stories and find out more at .