

Caught on Tape: New Planned Parenthood Cover Ups

Audio recordings from conversations with 813 Planned Parenthood and the National Abortion Federation clinics have been release to the public for the first time.

These tapes show that 91 percent of the clinics gave advice and tips on how to cover up a pregnancy involving a person portraying a 13-year-old girl who became pregnant by a 22-year-old man.

All 50 states have laws that require healthcare workers to report to law enforcement agencies incidents involving statutory rape when they have reasonable suspicion of child sexual abuse. Many abortion clinics routinely refused to comply with these laws.

Some clinic workers would interrupt the girl as she was giving the ages of the involved parties. Others would tell the girl to lie about her age, address, phone number and other personal information. Among many others, a third way to avoid compliance was to tell the girl that too much information was given and then refer her to another abortion clinic.

In several instances, the girl was told to have her 22-year-old boyfriend come in and pick up birth control pills. The clinic workers showed no concern for the child's welfare, nor were they concerned that the child may be sexually abused by an adult.

"I call upon prosecutors and law enforcement agencies to investigate abortion providers to put a stop to this rampant criminal activity," says Matthew Staver, founder and Chairman of Liberty Counsel. "Abortion providers like Planned Parenthood have no concern for the welfare of children. They cover up criminal activity involving child sexual abuse without showing any shame. Congress should defund Planned Parenthood. Members of the Senate who voted to continue funding Planned Parenthood's genocide will be remembered by the people when they go to the polls."
