

Chris Pratt on the L.A. Fires: 'We Trust in God'

Actor Chris Pratt took to Instagram where he gave a word of encouragement to fans and an update on his home amid the catastrophic Los Angeles fires.

"Miraculously, it's still standing," Pratt says about his home. "By the grace of God we have four walls and a roof."

"It's truly devastating as you know," he continues. "Silver lining is my house was saved, but at the same time, so many people's houses were burned around us and the community's gone."

Pratt says that what has happened in the area is heartbreaking, including the loss of his son's school and his ex-wife Anna Faris' house, which also burned down.

"Dozens of our friends lost their homes. It's just wild. And we're resilient. And we trust in God, and consider it all a blessing."

Pratt thanked fans for the prayers of support during this time of pain and chaos.

"It's been inspiring to see how our communities come together," says Pratt.

With so many people affected by the raging wildfires in Los Angeles, from celebrities to working-class Americans, continue to pray for those in California, knowing that God still has the world in the palm of His hands.
