

Chuck Norris: 'The Democrats Would Reject Moses if Trump Nominated Him'

Actor Chuck Norris, who has consistently let his conservatism be known in public circles, has written a scathing opinion piece against Democrats, which was published on .

Norris, a native of Ryan, Oklahoma, supported President Donald Trump during his campaign for the presidency in 2016.

In his op-ed column, the movie and television actor writes about last Wednesday as being one of the worst days for the Democratic Party since Donald Trump's election. The announcement that U.S. Supreme Court Senior Associate Justice Anthony Kennedy was retiring.

"Before the president and other conservative lawmakers even convened to discuss Justice Kennedy's possible replacements, liberals and progressives whined and cried injustice as they predicted the certain overturn of Roe v. Wade and the demise of modern left shifts in social equality," Norris writes.

"Leading liberals had a complete meltdown over the thought that another conservative might be appointed to the court. Apocalyptic fear and pandemonium immediately hit the fan and airwaves from mainstream media news stations to the blogosphere," he points out.

"Many other Dems have complained that two chief justice appointments by the president in the first 16 months of his term is unprecedented and unfair," Norris continued. "Wait. What's wrong with this picture? Does anyone remember the presidencies of former presidents Clinton and Obama?"

Norris quotes his friend former Arkansas Gov. Mike Huckabee's

statement to Fox News when he said, “If he put Moses up for the possibility of being Supreme Court Justice—the ultimate lawgiver, the Ten Commandments—they would still be against it.” {eo}
