

Clinton Campaign Caught Staging a Question About Trump

Earlier this week, while campaigning in Pennsylvania, Hillary Clinton took a question from a 15-year-old girl that more or less slammed Donald Trump for “body shaming” women.

Now, thanks to an eagle-eyed observer, we know that the girl who asked the question—reading it from a piece of paper—is an aspiring actress and her father is a Democrat state legislator who is a strong supporter of Clinton’s presidential campaign. It has led to more questions about whether or not the former secretary of state is staging her political events.

This isn’t the first time the campaign has been accused of staging its events. Last month, “Millennial Millie” Weaver, who reports for InfoWars, reported on an event at Temple University that had been closed to both the public and conservative media outlets.
