

Conservative Christians Fight Hollywood with “Left Behind: Rise of the Antichrist”

Global elites that control a one world government and monetary system is a impending reality we face in our world today. In “Left Behind: Rise Of The Antichrist,” the daunting global agendas are put on display on the big screen to show what a post rapture world would look like.

“It’s so prophetic into what is happening nowadays. We really get a deep dive into what the world would look like if everything was run by a specific group of people and it’s kind of scary that you have that happening nowadays. This movie couldn’t have come at a better time,” actor Braeden Sorbo says in our Charisma News interview.

The 21-year-old actor is the son of Kevin Sorbo and is falling right behind his dad in the world of acting. “To be able to film and partake in this movie was an absolute pleasure,” he says.

His message for other young Christians is to stand up for their faith and values despite what others may say. “What I’ve noticed is that there is a lot of people leaving the so called church, because the church is spewing a progressive worldview. There’s a pastor in the movie who was left behind in the rapture. He has a side story as to why he was left behind as the pastor of a church,” he says.

The Left Behind sequel hits theatres on Jan. 26, 2023 in over 1,500 theatres across America. The movie shows the eternal detriment of turning away from God and your faith.
