

Dallas Jenkins Envisions Bringing the Book of Acts to Viewers

Dallas Jenkins gave a peek into his grand vision on bringing the book of Acts to life.

As Crosswalk reported, the director said he would “love” to create a show dedicated to the storyline of the book of Acts once “The Chosen” finally reaches its conclusion. However, before envisioning an entirely new series, Jenkins says that season 7 of “The Chosen” will document “the launch of the ministry of the disciples.”

At a virtual news conference, Jenkins gave more details on what viewers can expect about Acts coming to life at the end of the “The Chosen.”

“We’re not going to go very far in the book of Acts at the end of Season 7. But I would absolutely love—and I’m hopeful—that I can continue telling the story of the birth of the church and the greatest moment in history.”

Right now, the majority of Jenkins’ time is centered on continuing to leverage the message of Jesus through “The Chosen.”

Jenkins also has “The Best Christmas Pageant Ever” currently in the works to head out in theaters on Nov. 8. The movie is from Barbara Robinson’s 1972 book by the same name. Getting to create this holiday film in itself is what Jenkins considers a dream come true.

Right now, "The Chosen" is currently filming season 5 as season 4 has had an array of bumps and delays getting to viewers after "The Chosen" and Angel Studios departed ways from one another.
