

Democrats Are Now Calling for a 'Revolution in the Streets,' and I Believe They Are Quite Serious

Donald Trump's surprise victory on Nov. 8 has spawned a series of violent protests and riots all over the nation as stunned leftists continue to throw the largest post-election temper tantrum in U.S. history.

Protesters in large cities all across America have been disrupting public transportation, looting stores, hurling objects at the police and burning Trump in effigy. There have even been shootings at anti-Trump rallies in Seattle and Portland. Hundreds of protesters have been arrested so far, and organizers are promising that this is just the beginning. Meanwhile, large numbers of enraged leftists are physically threatening Trump on Twitter, and some are even calling for a violent revolution. Sadly, I believe they are quite serious about this.

Even some big celebrity names are starting to use the word "revolution" in messages to their followers. On Twitter, Katy Perry has ominously warned that "the revolution is coming," and comedian Sarah Silverman has boldly declared that "Trump gets a chance to hear us (or else we R them) If he fails REVOLUTION IN THE STREETS."

Of course, other leftists are seeking less violent ways to oppose Trump. There is a major push to use the electoral college to block a Trump presidency. If that fails, there are many hoping to immediately impeach Trump once he takes office, and other activists such as former Labor Secretary Robert Reich are calling for a new third party if their planned post-election takeover of the Democratic Party is not successful.

But for many on the radical left, the time for patience is over. The #NotMyPresident movement is taking off like a rocket, and one survey found that only 58 percent of all Clinton supporters consider Trump's victory to be legitimate. A protest near Trump Tower in New York City on Saturday drew approximately 25,000 people, and USA Today reported that the anti-Trump protest in Portland, Oregon, on Saturday night rapidly "devolved into a riot."

It is becoming clear that these protests are not going away anytime soon, and some are even beginning to refer to this movement as "the Purple Revolution."

No sooner had Trump been declared the 45th president of the United States, Soros-funded political operations launched their activities to disrupt Trump during Obama's lame-duck period and thereafter. The swiftness of the Purple Revolution is reminiscent of the speed at which protesters hit the streets of Kiev, the Ukrainian capital, in two Orange Revolutions sponsored by Soros, one in 2004 and the other, ten years later, in 2014.

As the Clintons were embracing purple in New York, street demonstrations, some violent, all coordinated by the Soros-funded and Black Lives Matter, broke out in New York, Los Angeles, Chicago, Oakland, Nashville, Cleveland, Washington, Austin, Seattle, Philadelphia, Richmond, St. Paul, Kansas City, Omaha, San Francisco and some 200 other cities across the United States.

So could we actually see a violent revolution in the streets of America?

Is the radical left really so horrified by the prospect of a Trump presidency that they would actually be willing to engage in a prolonged campaign of chaos, violence and physical intimidation?

The Oath Keepers are so concerned about what this movement could become that they have initiated an intelligence gathering operation they are calling "Operation HYP0."

Clearly as Oath Keepers, we cannot simply sit around and watch while the enemies of liberty work to use violence to initiate a communist revolution in our country. As a result of the intelligence being provided by our Operation Sabot operatives, we have initiated Operation HYP0. We have allowed our personnel to burrow deep inside these protest organizations to collect information regarding tactics, motivations, schedules and logistics.

We had operatives at the planning meetings for the protests that occurred last evening in Baltimore, MD and Philadelphia, PA. Our operatives have also penetrated numerous other planning organizations in cities across the country. For OPSEC reasons, the precise list of cities we are operating in will not be publicly disclosed.

And one thing we already know is that the radical left is hoping to organize the largest political protest in United States history in Washington, D.C., on Inauguration Day. I will be writing about this later today on The Most Important News.

The election of Donald Trump has been the single most galvanizing event for the radical left we have seen in decades. One of the early leaders of the #NotMyPresident movement is filmmaker Michael Moore, and the following are three of his key action points which he feels must be implemented immediately:

1. Must quickly and decisively form an opposition movement, the likes of which hasn't been seen since the 1960s. I will do my part to help lead this as I'm sure many others (Bernie, Elizabeth Warren, MoveOn, the hip-hop community, DFA, etc.) will, too. The core of this opposition force will be fueled by young people who, as with Occupy Wall Street and Black Lives Matter, don't tolerate (expletive) and are relentless in their resistance to authority. They have no interest in compromising with racists and misogynists.

2. Prepare to impeach Trump. Just as the Republicans were already planning to do with President Hillary from Day One, we must organize the apparatus that will bring charges against him when he violates his oath and breaks the law—and then we must remove him from office.

3. Must commit right now to a vigorous fight (including civil disobedience, if necessary) which will block any and all Donald Trump Supreme Court nominees who do not meet our approval. We demand the Democrats in the Senate aggressively filibuster any nominees who support Citizens United or who oppose the rights of women, immigrants and the poor. This is non-negotiable.

But of course, other liberals are still in the “shock and disbelief” stage. As I have stated before, Americans were more emotionally invested in this election than they had been in any election in decades, and the aftermath has not been pretty.

This has been particularly true on college campuses all over the nation. According to the New York Post, college administrators have been going to extraordinary lengths to soothe the deep emotional pain many of their students are experiencing.

- The University of Michigan offered its traumatized students coloring books and Play-Doh to calm them. (Are its students in college or kindergarten?)
- The University of Kansas reminded its stressed-out kids that therapy dogs, a regular campus feature, were available.

- Cornell University, an Ivy League school, held a campuswide “cry-in,” with officials handing out tissues and hot chocolate.
- Tufts University offered its devastated students arts-and-crafts sessions (OK, not kindergarten—more like summer camp).
- At campuses from elite Yale in Connecticut to Iowa and beyond, professors canceled classes or exams, either because students asked or because instructors were too distraught to teach.

And it is also being reported that suicide hotlines are ringing off the hook all over the nation.

We have never seen anything like this ever before, and I have a feeling that this #NotMyPresident movement is going to absolutely dwarf the #OccupyWallStreet and #BlackLivesMatter movements. And considering the very high levels of anger, frustration and pain these radical leftists are feeling, it is easy to see how this movement could become very violent.

Many patriots, conservatives and Christians were hoping Donald Trump could bring America together and lead us into a new era of peace and prosperity, but the radical left already hates Trump more than any president before him.

It isn't going to take much to push the radical left over the edge, and if that happens, we could see nonstop chaos, violence and civil unrest for the next four years.
