

Dining With Joy

✖ Rachel Hauck | Thomas
Nelson

In Beaufort, S.C., Joy Ballard has become the host of her own cooking show; there's only one problem—she can't cook. In Dining With Joy: A Low Country Romance, Joy promises her father just minutes before he dies that she will take on his show. All is well until her producer decides to sell the show to Allison Wild of Wild Women Productions—but Allison was never told of Joy's lack of food-preparation skills.

Enter handsome chef Luke Davis, who has lost his Manhattan restaurant and ends up working at a local café to pay off his debts. Joy and Luke, who is also in the dark about her secret, fall in love and, as young Christians, must fight the physical chemistry they feel for each other. Joy's secret is revealed on national television, and now both she and Luke must regain their dignity.

Hauck, a former president of the American Christian Fiction Writers, will attract fans of Southern fiction who have read her previous novels in the genre, including Sweet Caroline and Lost in NashVegas. Dining With Joy is a quirky romance to be enjoyed by readers even if they have never visited the South.
