

‘Duck Dynasty Revival’: The Robertsons Are Back on A&E

The Robertson family is headed back to the small screen.

“Duck Dynasty: The Revival” is slated to premiere on A&E this summer, with the old gang regathering to deliver laughs, love and, undoubtedly, a powerful dose of faith.

The original show—which A&E noted is the “most-watched nonfiction series in cable history”—ended after 11 seasons in 2017.

The popular reality TV program made an indelible mark, too, as it inspired Christians nationwide and entertained the country more broadly as the Robertsons embarked on a series of antics surrounding their famous Duck Commander duck-calling company.

Now, they’re ready to do it all again.

“A&E has ordered 20 one-hour episodes – two seasons – from Wheelhouse’s Spoke Studios and Tread Lively Productions,” an A&E statement read. “The updated show will follow Willie and Korie and their growing family of adult children and grandchildren, the next generation of Robertsons living on the family homestead in Louisiana.”

Other family members will also dive into the mix, including Miss Kay and Uncle Si, a fan favorite.

A&E expressed excitement over the new endeavor, proclaiming that the network looks “forward to reuniting with the Robertsons on the revival.”

“Going back on A&E feels a little like going back home,” Willie and Korie Robertson said in a statement. “We’re thankful for all who have followed along as our family has grown and expanded and can’t wait to get cameras rolling again on all our new adventures, or perhaps misadventures.”
